CONTENTS

Contributors vii
Acknowledgements ix

1 Introduction 1
Shannon Brincat, Laura Lima and João Nunes

PART I
Interviews

2 For someone and for some purpose 15
An interview with Robert W. Cox

3 Citizenship, community and harm in world politics 35
An interview with Andrew Linklater

4 Challenging the ideas that made us 59
An interview with Ken Booth

5 The test of practice 82
An interview with Richard Wyn Jones

PART II
Rethinking the Origins

6 The 'secular' subject of Critical International Relations Theory 105
Mustapha Kamal Pasha

7 Vico Contra Kant: The competing critical theories of Cox and Linklater 115
Richard Devetak

PART III
Debating the Limits

8 Orientalism and The Poverty of Theory three decades on: Bringing Eastern and subaltern agency back into Critical IR Theory 129
John M. Hobson

9 Uncritical Theory 140
Brooke Ackerly

10 What is critical about Critical Theory revisited? The case of four international relations scholars and gender 150
Jacqui True

11 The continuing appeal of Critical Security Studies 159
Pinar Bilgin

PART IV
Future Directions

12 Beyond (Western) IR Theory: The post-colonial tradition and the restructuring of (critical) IR theory 173
Mark Neufeld

13 'Come in, make yourself uncomfortable!': Some thoughts on putting Critical Theory in its place 186
Martin Weber

14 The potential and perils of opposition 197
Michael C. Williams

15 Turning towards the world: Practicing critique in IR 207
Kimberly Hutchings

Index 217