CONTENTS

List of Figures xiv
List of Tables xiv
List of Abbreviations xvi

1. Introduction: a Social Science Theory for the 21st Century 1
   A new perspective
   The four main tenets of preference theory
   Modern society
   Reinstating preferences as a causal factor
   Britain and the USA as case-studies
   Plan of the book
   Future changes

2. The Failure to Predict 22
   Prediction versus post hoc explanation
   The male bias of labour market theory
   Feminist contributions
   Methodological considerations
   Conclusions

3. Causes of the New Scenario 43
   The contraceptive revolution
   Voluntary childlessness
   The equal opportunities revolution
   The expansion of white-collar and service work
   The creation of jobs for secondary earners
   Lifestyle choices in rich modern societies
   Conclusions

4. The Polarization of Preferences and Behaviour 84
   The polarization of sex-role preferences
   Does higher education make a difference?
   Polarization of attitudes within the workforce
   The polarization of women's employment
   Continuity and change in income-earning roles
   The polarization of household income
   Contradictory evidence: rising workrates
   Conclusions
5. Things are Different in the Younger Generations: Evidence from Longitudinal Studies 128
   The 1958 cohort study—NCDS
   Educational attainment
   Earnings and the pay gap
   Aspirations and sex-role ideology
   The financial dependence of wives
   Life satisfaction and psychological distress
   Younger generations in the USA
   Conclusions

6. Heterogeneous Preferences 157
   Home-centred women and the marriage career
   Work-centred women and the voluntary childfree
   Adaptive women: drifters and unplanned careers
   Social constraints and contextual influences
   Cross-national comparisons
   Conflicting interests
   Contradictory evidence: female depression
   Sources of the three preferences
   Conclusions

7. Marriage Markets and Educational Equality 193
   Marriage markets
   The qualifications gap and educational equality
   Educational homogamy of spouses
   Role segregation and family relationships
   Conclusions

8. Policy Applications 223
   The rhetoric and reality of pronatalist policies
   Policies for home-centred women
   Policies for adaptive women
   Policies for work-centred women
   Employer and trade union policies
   Conclusions

9. Preferences among Men 254
   The work-lifestyle preferences of men
   Enduring sex differences
   The globalization of marriage markets
   Male responses to the new scenario
   Conclusions
10. Conclusions
   Work-lifestyle preferences in the 21st century
   Beyond sex and gender
   Explanations for patriarchy and its success
   Methodological implications
   Cross-national comparisons
   Theorizing social change

References 290
Index 324
LIST OF FIGURES

9.1 Testosterone levels among men and women 259

LIST OF TABLES

1.1 A classification of women's work-lifestyle preferences in the 21st century 6
3.1 Pregnancy and births during teenage years by highest educational qualification among women aged 20–24 in 1991 48
3.2 The increasing acceptability of childlessness 53
3.3 Comparisons of workrates and part-time work in Europe and the USA, 1997 58
3.4 The impact of sex-role ideology on employment rates among women 78
4.1 The diversity of sex-role preferences in Europe 86
4.2 Sex-role preferences in Britain, 1999 93
4.3 Divergent attitudes to the sexual division of labour within the workforce 100
4.4 Patterns of work and inactivity among women of working age by occupational grade 103
4.5 The decline in continuous employment and the marriage career 108
4.6 Young women's workplans and outcomes in the USA 109
4.7 Percentage of total earnings contributed by the husband, on average, in couples with a wife aged 20–60 in 1985 116
4.8 Workrates among mothers of children under school age, Britain 121
5.1 Highest qualifications of men and women: a comparison between 1991 Census data on all 33-year-olds and 1991 NCDS data 132
5.2 Women's earnings as a percentage of men's among full-time employees 136
5.3 Median hourly earnings by highest qualification, hours worked, and sex 137
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Figure/Table</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5.4 Criteria for choosing a new job by highest qualification level</td>
<td>140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5.5 Percentage of potential working life spent employed for two cohorts of young women: NCDS and WES</td>
<td>143</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5.6 Income dependency of married and cohabiting women by her employment status and presence of children</td>
<td>145</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5.7 Qualifications by number of children at age 33 among NCDS women</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5.8 Distribution of work-lifeplans of women in their early 30s in the USA</td>
<td>151</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6.1 The full classification of women's work-lifestyle preferences in the 21st century</td>
<td>158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.1 Long-term trends in educationally homogamous marriages and in women marrying up in the USA, 1890–1970</td>
<td>206</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.2 Educational homogamy by highest qualification, Britain, 1949</td>
<td>207</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.3 Educational homogamy in three age cohorts, Britain, 1992</td>
<td>208</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.4 Educational homogamy by highest qualification, Britain, 1996</td>
<td>209</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.5 Long-term trends in educationally homogamous marriages and women marrying up in West Germany, 1900–1978</td>
<td>211</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.6 Trends in educational homogamy at marriage in Hungary, 1950–1992</td>
<td>212</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7.7 Trends in educationally homogamous marriages and women marrying up in 23 industrialized nations, 1949–1983</td>
<td>213</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8.1 Average tax rate paid by an adult full-time production worker on average earnings in the manufacturing sector, 1994</td>
<td>230</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9.1 A classification of men's work-lifestyle preferences in the 21st century</td>
<td>255</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>