

Contents

Foreword	9
Acknowledgements	11
1. The Increasing Use of Market Research	13
The growth of the market for market research	13
Case studies	16
2. Decision-making and the Need for Research	21
Definition of market research	21
Purposes of market research	22
The role of marketing management	22
Marketing as a systematic process	23
Case study	23
Collecting research data	27
A structured approach to decision making	29
Guidelines for decision-making	31
Checklist of questions on the use of research	32
3. Analysing Markets	35
The need for objective external research	35
The market analysis	36
Creating a market 'map'	36
Guidelines for commissioning external research	39
Using market research	40
Sources of information	41
Using the information	43
Case study	45
Checklist of key questions for market analysis	46

4. Researching and Developing New Products	49
New product development	50
Product development and market research	50
New product development research procedures	52
Market testing	53
Two case studies	54
Checklist of questions on researching and developing new products	58
5. Monitoring the Success of a Product	59
The monitoring sequence	61
Case study - the sausage market again	62
Checklist of questions for monitoring the success of a product	64
6. Developing Market Communications	65
Case study	67
Checklist of questions for communication planning	70
7. Monitoring the Success of an Advertising Campaign	71
Case study	72
Checklist of questions for monitoring the success of an advertising campaign	77
8. Identifying and Measuring Consumer Attitudes	79
The growing importance of marketing	79
Assessing consumer buying behaviour	80
Researching behavioural characteristics of the consumer	81
Buyers' characteristics and buying decisions	82
Buying roles	82
Buying behaviour	83
Examining the purchasing process	84
Consumer behaviour classifications	86
Case study	94
Conclusion	95
Checklist of questions for identifying and measuring consumer attitudes	96

9. Assessing and Improving the Sales Process	97
Research as an aid to sales management	98
Case study	98
Case study - research to aid sales planning	99
Case study - research to assess the effectiveness of sales methods	100
Researching the sales process	103
Research as an aid to sales planning	104
Research as an aid to sales organization	105
Research as an aid to monitoring sales effectiveness	106
Case study - polling employee opinions	108
Case studies - assessing purchasing criteria	109
Conclusion	111
Checklist of questions to customers for assessing the effectiveness of the sales activity	112
10. Developing a Marketing Information System	113
Why is it important to have a system?	113
Setting up a marketing information system	114
Elements of a marketing information system	115
Case study - setting up the marketing information system	116
Using a marketing information system	120
Conclusion	124
Checklist	124
11. The Effective Use of Market Research	127
Choosing the research company	127
Carrying out the research	128
Briefing the research company	129
Completion of the research	131
Case studies	131
Case study - using results to influence the market successfully	132
Case study - assessing competitive advantages	133
Case study - reappraising the results	134
Case study - reorganizing sales and marketing planning	136
The action after the research	139

Conclusion	140
Checklist of questions for the effective use of market research	141
References and Recommended Reading List	143
Glossary of Terms	145
Useful Addresses	155
Index	165