

Contents

List of Figures	viii
List of Tables	ix
List of Boxes	x
Acknowledgements	xi
1 The Importance of Television	1
2 Television as Text	9
3 The Genres of Television	41
4 The Television Industry	74
5 Television Production	109
6 The Importance of Audiences	139
7 Watching Audiences	167
8 Postscript: Text, Producer, Audience	205
Bibliography	210
Index	220

Figures

1.1	Television and the real world	4
2.1	An evening's viewing	14–15
3.1	Inside Soap magazine	47
4.1	The diffusion of consumer goods	76
4.2	The footprint of the Star satellite	80
4.3	Britain's media: how they are related	88–9
4.4 and 4.5	France and the international media	94
4.6	News Corporation	96
6.1	Audience responses to Nationwide	144
6.2	Tabloids on soaps	158

Tables

3.1	Quiet and busy weeks in television news	56
4.1	Ownership of television sets	75
4.2	International media companies	97-8
4.3	Trade in television	99
4.4	Production costs per hour of BBC 1 and BBC 2 network productions, 1992	105
5.1	Soap opera production	112
6.1	Hours of viewing	147
6.2	Leisure inside the home (minutes per average day)	148
6.3	Viewers of the main programme types by socio-economic background	148
6.4	Viewing of the main programme types by viewers of different programmes	149
6.5	Audience size and average audience appreciation	152
6.6	Programme clusters	152
7.1	The social uses of television	170
7.2	The rhetorical context of mutual aid (in percentages)	178
7.3	Categories of involvement in television viewing	181
7.4	Real and ludic keyings in referential statements, by ethnicity (in percentages)	190
7.5	The relationship between hot and cold and referential and critical framings	196

Boxes

1	The segmentation of MTV	17
2	Findings of the Glasgow University Media Group	64
3	PM backs Aitken in attack on BBC	77
4	The producer's medium	114-15
5	Do men pretend?	176
6	Referential interpretations of television	187-8