

Contents

Dedication	vii
Acknowledgments	ix
On the Breadth and Relevance of Blumer's Perspective: Introduction to his Analysis of Industrialization
David R. Maines and Thomas J. Morrione	xi
I.    INTRODUCTION	1
II.   AMBIGUITY OF THE CONCEPT OF INDUSTRIALIZATION	13
The Inadequacy of the Colloquial Meaning of "Industrialization"	14
The Confusion of Industrialization with Other Processes	16
Study of Selected Aspects or Expressions of "Industrialization"	24
III.  THE NATURE OF INDUSTRIALIZATION	31
Industrialization as a Type of Economy	32
Views of Industrialization as an Agent of Social Change	35
The Framework of Industrialization	42
Variation in Industrialization	49
IV.  INDUSTRIALIZATION AS AN AGENT OF SOCIAL CHANGE—PRELIMINARY CONSIDERATIONS	53
Analysis of Happenings at Points of Entry	58

	Implications of the Analysis	75
	Summary Remarks	82
V.	INDUSTRIALIZATION AND THE TRADITIONAL ORDER	85
	Response of the Established Order to Industrialization	88
	Significance of the Differential Responses of Established Social Orders	97
	Summary Observations	101
VI.	INDUSTRIALIZATION AND PROBLEMS OF SOCIAL TRANSITION	103
	The Alleged Role of Industrialization in Producing Social Disorder	104
	Assessment of Industrialization as a Source of Social Disorder	113
	Relation of Early Industrialization to Disorganization and Disorder	120
VII.	THE NEUTRAL ROLE OF INDUSTRIALIZATION	127
	The Construction of a Typology of Early Industrialization	129
	The Addition of the Social Setting	134
VIII.	IMPLICATIONS OF THE NEUTRAL ROLE OF INDUSTRIALIZATION	145
	Implications for Research and Scholarly Study	145
	Research Procedure under the New Perspective	150
	Comparative Study of Industrialization	159
	The "Ideal Type" of Analysis	161
	Implications for Social Policy	165
	INDEX	169