

Contents

List of figures	vii
Preface to the second edition	ix
Acknowledgements	xiii
Introduction	1
1 Sources of Japanese identity: historical and mythological foundations of Japan	5
2 The house and family system	22
3 Socialisation and classification	42
4 Community and neighbourhood	57
5 Status and stratification in the wider world	76
6 The education system	96
7 Religious influences	115
8 Ritual and the life cycle	133
9 Careers and continuity: opportunities for working life	149
10 Arts, entertainment and leisure	168
11 Politics and government	187
12 The legal system and social control	204
Conclusion: evaporating the inscrutability	222
Index	227

Figures

- | | | |
|-----|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 1.1 | Haniwa such as this helmeted soldier with sword are useful sources of information about pre-historic Japan. | 11 |
| 2.1 | Elements of the ie . | 25 |
| 2.2 | Dōzoku hierarchical group. | 28 |
| 2.3 | Families remember their departed members at the Buddhist altar in the home. | 29 |
| 3.1 | A porch for removing shoes is found at the entrance of every Japanese home. It marks clearly the distinction between uchi and soto worlds. | 44 |
| 4.1 | The circulating notice board ensures that residents of a community are kept informed about events taking place there. It also keeps neighbours in touch. | 62 |
| 4.2 | Community festivals invariably include the sound of drums. Local participants vie for places in the musicians' seats. | 69 |
| 4.3 | Cooperative efforts produce 10,000 school lunches a day at this municipal centre. Each of these large cauldrons holds 1,000 helpings. | 71 |
| 5.1 | Nakane's basic model. | 86 |
| 5.2 | Nakane's elaborated model. | 86 |
| 6.1 | Classes of up to 45 children are managed by dividing them into smaller groups which work together and take collective responsibility for their activities. | 99 |
| 7.1 | A selection of protective charms and amulets like these are available at shrines and temples. | 122 |
| 8.1 | Children of seven, five and three years dress up in traditional garments to pray for good fortune in shrines all over Japan in November. | 137 |

- 9.1 These statues, which stand in front of Tateyama hospital, depict physically the family line which has headed the establishment since it was founded. 157
- 9.2 A local branch manager looks over the work of some of her subordinates in a provincial bank. This woman was Japan's first female branch manager, appointed autumn 1986. 162
- 10.1 This ballet teacher illustrates the principle of teaching by 'putting (the accomplishment) into the body'. 174
- 10.2 The Imperial Palace, which occupies a large area of land in the centre of Tokyo, forms a popular backdrop for photographs of groups visiting the city. 183
- 11.1 The 'Diet' or Japanese parliament can be seen here through one of the gates of the Imperial Palace. In many ways the Western-type system of government operates with heavy Japanese modifications in practice, although the Emperor has no power. 190
- 12.1 The former Ministry of Justice in Tokyo has a brick front reflecting the Western influence in the Japanese legal system. Like the legal system, however, the inside is constructed in a completely different way. 207