

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Foreword
Professor John Hunter (University of Birmingham)	iii
Introduction
Robert Arnott (University of Birmingham)	v
Palaeopathology and archaeology: the current state of play	1
Charlotte Roberts (University of Durham)
Tooth worms and pelicans: dentistry in archaeology	21
Chrissie Freeth (University of Bradford)
Ancient bodies, but modern techniques: the utilisation of CT scanning in the study of ancient Egyptian mummies	33
Joyce M. Filer (The British Museum)
Disease and medicine in Hittite Asia Minor	41
Robert Arnott (University of Birmingham)
The Hippocratic patient: or an archaeology of the Greek medical mind	53
Niall McKeown (University of Birmingham)
The Roman military Valetudinaria: fact or fiction?	69
Patricia Baker (University of Kent at Canterbury)
The interpretation of medicinal plants in the archaeological context: some case-studies from Pompeii	81
Marina Ciaraldi (University of Birmingham)
Roman surgery: the evidence of the instruments	87
Ralph Jackson (The British Museum)
Investigating the Anglo-Saxon Materia Medica: archaeobotany, manuscript art, Latin and Old English	95
Debby Banham (University of Cambridge)
Bald's Leechbook and archaeology: two approaches to Anglo-Saxon health and healthcare	101
Sally Crawford (University of Birmingham) and Tony Randall (University of Oxford)
The Mary Rose medical chest	105
Brendan Derham (Gloucester)

Morbid Osteology	113
Mouli Start (University of Sheffield)
Recognition and understanding of age-related bone loss and osteoporosis-related fractures in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries	125
Megan Brickley (University of Birmingham)
List of contributors	129