

Contents

Guest Editorial
From molecular targets to public health – biological and genetic research in occupational health	1
Kirsti Husgafvel-Pursiainen, Harri Vainio, Finnish Institute of Occupational Health, Helsinki
From exposure through molecular mechanisms to occupational health risk assessment	7
Jorma Rantanen, Finnish Institute of Occupational Health, Helsinki
Cancer in Finland: Present and future	15
Timo Hakulinen, Finnish Cancer Registry and Department of Public Health, University of Helsinki, Helsinki
Genetic factors in carcinogenesis	23
Claes Ramel, Arrhenius Laboratory, Stockholm University, Stockholm
Mesothelioma incidence may be levelling off but the toll is still heavy in Sweden	33
Kari Hemminki, Xinjun Li, Karolinska Institute, Huddinge
Smokeless tobacco and Swedish snus; Issues of science, public health and ethics	43
Harri Vainio, Elisabete Weiderpass, International Agency for Research on Cancer, Lyon
Pathways join into a highway: Thirty years of biomarker research	51
Helmut Bartsch, German Cancer Research Center (DKFZ), Heidelberg

Pharmacogenomics of carcinogen-metabolizing enzymes and cancer susceptibility	61
Olavi Pelkonen, Kirsi Vähäkangas, Arja Rautio, Hannu Raunio, University of Oulu, Oulu
Science and ethics – friends or enemies?	75
Marja Sorsa, CA ConsultArt Ltd., Espoo
European research area: Challenges and opportunities	85
Lea Ryyänen-Karjalainen, Reijo Vihko, Academy of Finland, Helsinki
Seminar programme	92