
CONTENTS

List of figures and tables	vii
Acknowledgements	ix
1 Introduction: crises in authority relations?	1
2 The British economy in crisis?	13
3 What do managers do?	44
4 What are trade unions for?	79
5 Industrial conflict – a measure of crisis?	105
6 Whatever happened to industrial democracy?	143
7 Does class matter any more?	175
8 Industrial sociology – an identity crisis?	203
Bibliography	221
Index	233

FIGURES AND TABLES

Figure 2.1 Employment and unemployment in the United Kingdom, 1950–88

Figure 2.2 The rise in women's employment in Great Britain, 1960–89

Figure 2.3 Unemployment in the United Kingdom, 1950–78 (including registered non-claimants)

Figure 2.4 Inflation

Figure 2.5 Private and public sector employment in the United Kingdom, 1966–88

Figure 2.6 Growth of GDP and consumer spending, 1969–88

Figure 2.7 Industrial production: OECD 1970–86

Figure 2.8 Manufacturing labour productivity in Great Britain, 1977Q1–1988Q1

Figure 2.9 Manufacturing labour productivity in Great Britain, 1969Q1–1973Q2

Figure 4.1 Matrix showing union functions (horizontal axis) in relation to oppositional role (vertical axis)

Figure 5.1 Type of labour organization

Figure 6.1 Managers' (a) and representatives' (b) views on industrial democracy and participation

Table 2.1 The regional distribution of employment change, 1979–89

Table 4.1 Trade unions – numbers and memberships, 1974–88

Table 4.2 Trade unions – analysis by industry, 1982–6

Table 4.3 Aggregate trade union membership and density

Table 4.4 Number of days lost through strikes

Table 5.1 Strike characteristics for thirteen western industrial countries, 1900–29 and 1945–68

Table 5.2 Working class power and organization and industrial conflict in eighteen capitalist democracies

Table 5.3 Stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in the United Kingdom, summary for 1970–85

Table 5.4 Industrial disputes – working days lost per thousand employees* in all industries and services, 1975–84

Table 5.5 Industrial disputes – working days lost per thousand employees* in selected industries (mining and quarrying, manufacturing, construction, and transport and communication), 1975–84

Table 5.6 Meanings and purposes of action

Appendix Industrial disputes: comparisons of coverage and methodology

Table 6.1 Arguments for and against worker representation on public sector boards

Table 6.2 The main institutional forms of industrial democracy

Table 7.1 Registrar General's class categories

Table 7.2 Goldthorpe's class categories

Table 7.3 Job levels of employees by ethnic group (%)