

Contents

Chapter 1: Introduction: subject of this study	1
1.1 Introduction	1
1.2 General background: the ‘dualisation’ of Dutch society	1
1.3 Power and labour market structure: segmentation theory	5
1.4 Description of the theoretical model	9
1.5 Some critical notes and additions	15
1.6 Delineation and restrictions	18
1.7 Outline of this book	19
Chapter 2: Labour market theories: relations between employers and workers	23
2.1 Introduction: formulation of the problem	23
2.2 The explanation of labour market structure: two approaches	23
2.3 Circulation and production	25
2.4 Firm-specific skills: immobility and high wages?	28
2.5 Productivity: efficiency wages	38
2.6 Radical and Marxist theories: class struggle and segmentation	40
2.7 Conclusion	44
Chapter 3: Relations between employers	47
3.1 Introduction	47
3.2 An evaluation of some empirical research on Averitt’s model and related ideas	48
3.3 Relations between firms and transfer	56
3.4 Transfer of fluctuation or internal solution?	60
3.5 Conclusion	62
Chapter 4: Market phase and production chains	65
4.1 Introduction: kinds of fluctuation and their effects	65
4.2 Dynamic market theory: the general model	66
4.3 Market phase and subcontracting	71
4.4 The 1960s and 1970s: tapered integration and horizontal supplying	73
4.5 The 1980s and 1990s: desintegration and vertical supplying	75
4.6 Conclusion	77

Chapter 5: Power and transfer: legal and economic unit 81

5.1 Introduction	81
5.2 The general concept of power	82
5.3 Property and risk	84
5.4 Economic unit: operational integration	86
5.5 Two other forms of legally based control	87
5.6 Conclusion	92

Chapter 6: Power in production chains 95

6.1 Introduction	95
6.2 The relation between suppliers and buyers: parameter dependency	95
6.3 Further considerations on production chains	104
6.4 Power distribution in a production chain	110
6.5 Conclusion	115

Chapter 7: Distribution between employers: sales fluctuation and profits 119

7.1 Introduction	119
7.2 Production models and fluctuation coping strategies	120
7.3 The model of the production chain	126
7.4 Between-layer effects: the pyramid of vertical supplying	128
7.5 Within-layer effects: the pyramid of horizontal supplying	138
7.6 Conclusion: distribution between employers in production chains	143

Chapter 8: Distribution between employers and workers:
job fluctuation and job structure 147

8.1 Introduction	147
8.2 Labour market consequences of fluctuation coping policies	148
8.3 Flexibility of labour input	151
8.4 The quantitative flexibility of labour: being 'external'	154
8.5 Fluctuation: is there symmetry?	158
8.6 Conclusion	162

Chapter 9: Distribution of financial results between employers and workers: collective contracts	165
9.1 Introduction	165
9.2 Collective contracts: the role of the state	166
9.3 Power and distribution on the labour market: the relevant market	171
9.4 Employers and workers: the role of power and market developments	173
9.5 Conclusion	175
Chapter 10: Intermezzo: summary and outlook	179
10.1 Introduction	179
10.2 Summary	179
10.3 Outlook: empirical analysis	189
10.4 Hypotheses on segmentation	194
Chapter 11: Structure of the analysis: some notes on methodology	201
11.1 Introduction	201
11.2 Segmentation theory: structure of the analysis	201
11.3 A note on the measurement of fluctuation	204
11.4 The time dimension of 'structure': constancy and change	210
11.5 From step 1 to step 2: economic power and transfer	221
11.6 Power in the Netherlands: problems with geography	227
11.7 A last methodological problem: multicollinearity	230
11.8 Conclusion	231
Chapter 12: Power, fluctuation, and job structure	235
12.1 Introduction	235
12.2 From step 1 to step 3: consequences of economic power in terms of sales fluctuation	235
12.3 An intervening factor between step 3 and step 4: production smoothing	238
12.4 From step 3 to step 4: sales fluctuation and job fluctuation	250
12.5 From step 4 to step 5: job fluctuation and job structure	252
12.6 Summary: power and job structure	258
12.7 Change on the labour market in the 1980s	260
12.8 The organisation of the labour market: symmetry regarding fluctuation and Collective Contracts	265
Addendum to Chapter 12. Excursion: three examples regarding sales, production and job fluctuation	274

Chapter 13: Financial results. The accumulation principle	281
13.1 Introduction	281
13.2 From step 1 to step 3: power and profits	281
13.3 From step 3 to step 4: from profits to wages	283
13.4 An intervening factor between step 3 and 4: the institution of Collective Contracts and AVV	284
13.5 Conclusion: the symmetry principle regarding financial rewards	291
13.6 The second principle of distribution: the accumulation principle	292
13.7 General conclusion: empirical results of the cross-sectional analysis regarding segmentation theory	300
Chapter 14: Chain position and power	305
14.1 Introduction	305
14.2 Two important issues: relations and time developments	305
14.3 Dependencies and chains	307
14.4 Structure of the analysis of distribution in production chains	328
14.5 Economic connections between industries in the secondary sector: general sketch	331
14.6 Conclusion	336
Chapter 15: Time developments and distribution: the vertical chain	339
15.1 Introduction	339
15.2 Selection of the chain; development of hypotheses	339
15.3 Chain 281-294030-22124-2312: a general picture of the whole chain from petroleum to the readymade clothing industries	347
15.4 Vertical relations: transfer of fluctuation backwards	355
15.5 The vertical chain: price pressure in forward direction	364
15.6 Conclusion: vertical transfer and labour market structure	377
Addendum to Chapter 15: tables and figures	379

Chapter 16: Distribution in the horizontal chain	391
16.1 Introduction	391
16.2 Horizontal relations: horizontal subcontracting in the readymade clothing industry.	393
16.3 Transfer in the horizontal chain: sales fluctuation 1980-1991	401
16.4 Horizontal subcontracting: job fluctuation 1973-1982 and 1983-1992	414
16.5 Financial results: profits and wages	424
16.6 One additional item: the economic and social impact of subcontracting	427
16.7 Conclusion	429
Addendum to Chapter 16: tables and figures	433
Chapter 17: Conclusion: Economic power and labour market segmentation	445
17.1 Introduction	445
17.2 Distribution: symmetry and accumulation. Cross-sectional analysis. The theory is right...	447
17.3 Counteracting mechanisms: fluctuation coping policy and collective contracts	450
17.4 Power and transfer: vertical and horizontal chains ... but it seems to be wrong?	451
17.5 Evaluation of the theory	455
17.6 The process of segmentation in the secondary sector	457
17.7 Some issues for future research	467
Bibliography	473
Appendix 1: Method, data bases and variables calculated i
A1.1 Time series and fluctuation	i
A1.2 Dependencies	xii
A1.3 Data bases	xiv
A1.4 Variables calculated	xx
Appendix 2: Decisions concerning matching of data bases	xxix
De rol van afwenteling in het ontstaan van arbeidsmarktstructuren. Samenvatting (Dutch summary)	LI