Preface	page vii
1 Rationality and predictability	1
1.1 Overview	1
1.2 The micro–macro transition	3
1.3 Arguments from rationality	9
1.4 Arguments from equilibrium	15
1.5 Adaptive expectations	18
1.6 Rational expectations	22
2 Equilibrium	33
2.1 Overview	33
2.2 Mutual rational beliefs	34
2.3 Game-theoretic reasoning	43
2.4 Consistent beliefs	49
2.5 Justifications of Nash equilibrium	56
2.6 Focal points	65
2.7 Unreasonable equilibria	72
2.8 Is common knowledge enough?	79
3 Epistemic rationality	85
3.1 Overview	85
3.2 Incredible threats	87
3.3 Backward induction	91
3.4 Forward induction	98
3.5 Refinements	103
3.6 Modeling belief changes	109
3.7 Signals and mistakes	119
4 Self-fulfilling theories	127
4.1 Overview	127
4.2 Backward induction equilibrium	130

4.3	Knowledge-dependent games	142
4.4	Knowledge manipulation	155
4.5	Communication	162
4.6	Incomplete information	166
4.7	Belief revision and common knowledge	170
5	Paradoxes of rationality	177
5.1	Overview	177
5.2	Threats and promises	178
5.3	Explicit contracts	182
5.4	Implicit contracts	184
5.5	Reputation	188
5.6	Finite repetition and backward induction	192
5.7	Bounded knowledge and the prisoner's dilemma	195
5.8	Constrained maximization	202
5.9	The lover's paradox and other puzzles	213
5.10	Irrationality	216
6	Learning and norms: The case of cooperation	221
6.1	Overview	221
6.2	Norms of cooperation	223
6.3	The nature of norms	227
6.4	Norms as equilibria	229
6.5	Learning to cooperate	236
6.6	From two to many	246
6.7	From micro to macro again	252
