

Contents

List of Illustrations	vii
Acknowledgements	viii
Notes on Television Programmes	x
Introduction	1
1 TELEVISION: FAMILIARITY AND PHENOMENOLOGY	13
1.1 Audience and Life-world	13
1.2 Beginning the Analysis: the Breakfast-time Viewer	21
1.3 Television's Familiarity and 'Personal Sense'	33
2 TELEVISION: HERMENEUTICS AND HORIZONS	44
2.1 Understanding as a 'Fusion of Horizons'	45
2.2 Identification and Social Roles	49
2.3 Identification and New Perspectives	60
2.4 Post-structuralist Hermeneutics	63
3 AUDIENCES: CONSTRUCTIONS OF SENSE	71
3.1 Watching Television	71
3.2 Viewers and Varieties of Meaning	83
3.3 Serials, Sense and Identification	92
4 VIEWING AND THE VERIDICAL EFFECT	104
4.1 The Audience's Horizon of Expectations	104
4.2 Identification and the Veridical Effect	114
4.3 Producing the Veridical Effect	118

5	MECHANISMS OF IDENTIFICATION IN FILM AND TELEVISION	126
5.1	The Filmic Point-of-view Shot	127
5.2	The Televisual Point-of-view Shot	131
5.3	Televisual Identification and the Subjective Travelling Shot	134
5.4	Discourses of Speech in Voiceover	136
5.5	Discourses of Speech in Direct Address	148
6	SUBVERTING THE VERIDICAL IMAGE	153
6.1	The Text of Contradiction	153
6.2	The Text of Possibility	158
6.3	The Postmodern Image	166
7	TOWARDS AN 'EPIC' TELEVISION	172
7.1	The Programme as Hierarchy	173
7.2	Subverting the Hierarchy	182
	Conclusion: Resisting Television's Familiarity	196
	Bibliography	210
	Index	223