

Contents

Preface	xvii
Acknowledgements	xxiii
About the Authors	xxv

PART ONE

The Context of European Human Resource Management Perspectives and determinants

CHAPTER ONE

Anglo-Saxon Models of HRM

Theoretical debates from across the water	3
■ Introduction	3
■ What is HRM? A historical perspective	5
■ Matching models of HRM: the Michigan and New York schools	7
■ The contribution of contingency-based models	10
■ The Harvard model of HRM: multiple stakeholders	12
■ The arguments behind the US approach to HRM	13
■ The assimilation of HRM concepts into the UK	14
■ A contextual model of HRM	16
■ Strategic intent: the Schuler model and people-related business issues	19
■ Behavioural consistency	20
■ Devolvement of HRM to line managers	23
■ The relevance of HRM for European managers	24
■ Conclusions	24

CHAPTER TWO

The European Perspective on HRM 27

■ Introduction	27
■ European interest in HRM: criticism of US models	29
■ European models of HRM: a rich array of situational influences	30

- Historical competence, role and development of the HRM function in European organizations 31
- Latin, Central European and Nordic models of HRM? 37
- Worldwide patterns in the relative importance of HRM practices for competitive advantage 41
- Empirical evidence on differences in HRM between the US and European countries 43
- Conclusions 48

CHAPTER THREE

Factors that Influence European HRM Practice 50

- Introduction 50
- Institutional factors 52
- National competitive advantage 56
- The influence of business structure 57
- Cultural constraints in management practice and theories 60
- What is national culture? 61
- How do national cultures vary? 62
- Four dimensions of national culture 67
- National culture and the concept of time 70
- Are national cultures becoming more similar? 72
- How do national cultural differences affect HRM in organizations? 73
- Cultural differences in pay systems: distributive justice 75
- Cultural differences in career mobility 75
- Organizational culture as a magnifier of national cultural differences 76
- Approaches to managing cultural diversity 77
- Conclusions 83

PART TWO

The Context of European Human Resource Management
Strategic pressures driving developments

CHAPTER FOUR

Strategic Pressures Driving Developments in European HRM 89

- Economic pressures 92
- Increasing international competition 92
- Productivity pressures 95
- Removal of trade barriers and the Single European Market (SEM) 96
- Competitive threat, restructuring and rationalization 98
- Mergers, acquisitions and strategic alliances 102
- Shorter development and life cycles of products and services 103
- Privatization of state enterprises 104
- Transformation of Central and Eastern European economies 106
- The multi-speed Europe scenario: competitive realignment and devaluations 107
- New forms of economic competition 110

■ Technological advances	111
■ Social and demographic trends	114
■ Social costs of employment	114
■ Rising unemployment	116
■ Demographic shifts and an ageing workforce	119
■ Shift from manufacturing to services	122
■ Increasing participation of women	123
■ Increasing number of part time and temporary workers	125
■ Rising level of education	128
■ Rise in self-employment	129
■ Increasing skill shortages	130
■ New patterns of labour mobility	130
■ Rising concern over immigration	131
■ Changing values and expectations of the workforce	133
■ Declining wage disparities and decentralization of bargaining structures	134
■ Changing role of the trade unions	135
■ Increasing amount of employment legislation	136
■ Conclusions	136

CHAPTER FIVE

The Organizational Response

Integration of European management	141
■ Globalization and transnationalization of businesses	141
■ Transnationalism as a source of European competitive advantage	144
■ Flexible cadres of international managers as the vanguard of deep structural changes in patterns of HRM	146
■ European management integration through foreign direct investment	148
■ The merger and acquisition phenomenon in the EU	149
■ Japanese entry into European markets through acquisition	151
■ Hostile takeovers: a new experience for European managers	152
■ Shareholder democratization and legislative reform	153
■ Attractiveness of the merger and acquisition option	154
■ Difficulties in achieving integration through mergers and acquisitions	155
■ Which country's firms have the best corporate performance?	156
■ The battle between competing modes of European capitalism	158
■ Geographic scale of the top European organizations	160
■ Who were the acquirers and who were the targets?	160
■ Pan-European integration in key industrial sectors	163
■ Acquiring in Eastern Europe	166
■ Strategic integration options for European organizations	168
■ Making strategic alliances work	171
■ The HRM impact of the forces of integration	172
■ Employment effects of cross-border mergers and acquisitions	173
■ European business networks and new contexts for HRM decisions	174
■ FDI and new patterns of HRM	175
■ The merger process and new patterns of HRM	177

Contents

■ Alliances, power sharing and new pressures on national models of HRM	177
■ The lessons of industrial restructuring for European HRM	179
■ Conclusions	180

CHAPTER SIX

An Emerging European Style of Management?

Patterns of convergence and divergence	183
---	------------

■ Introduction	183
■ The notion of European management	184
■ Forces of integration within European HRM	191
■ Convergence or divergence in European HRM practice?	195
■ Implications of strategic pressures for human resource management	197
■ The HRM issues facing European organizations: an agenda	205
■ The future role of European HRM managers	206
■ Conclusions	208

PART THREE

The Content of European Human Resource Management

CHAPTER SEVEN

Changing Organizational Culture	213
---	------------

■ Introduction	213
■ Importance of organizational culture change issues: some comparative evidence	215
■ What is organizational culture?	216
■ Different levels of organizational culture	217
■ Organizational cultures versus national cultures	219
■ Classifying organizational cultures	220
■ The issue of subcultures	222
■ What makes some organizational cultures stronger than others?	223
■ The link between organizational culture and HRM practices	227
■ Can organizational culture be managed through HRM?	228
■ Club Méditerranée (Club Med): selecting for customer service	232
■ Is there a link between strong organizational culture and performance?	233
■ Why large-scale change programmes frequently fail	236
■ Methods of organizational culture change	237
■ British Airways: a case of transformational change?	239
■ Sainsbury's: a reliance on programmatic change	241
■ Hoffmann-La Roche: a customer focus	243
■ Scandinavian Airlines (SAS): the role of crisis, leadership and symbolic change	244
■ Bowing to cultural reality: adapting HRM practices to local conditions	245
■ Conclusions	246

CHAPTER EIGHT

Structuring the Organization	250
■ Introduction	250
■ Structuring the organization: multiple perspectives	252
■ Structural change will be a pervasive and continuous process in the 1990s	255
■ What is organization structure: physical traits or dimensions?	257
■ What is organization structure: metaphors and images?	258
■ The main ways of organizing people	260
■ Purpose of organization design	266
■ Asking important questions about appropriate behaviour	267
■ Social processes precipitated by structural change	268
■ National differences in organization structure	269
■ The impact of national culture on co-ordination preferences	274
■ The international division: emergence of multinational structures	278
■ Evolution towards the global organization: three principal co-ordinating categories	281
■ Functional co-ordination	283
■ Product co-ordination	284
■ From functional to product co-ordination at Bayer Group	286
■ Country co-ordination	288
■ Matrix co-ordination	288
■ Evolving the matrix: product over country in Philips Electronics	291
■ Simplifying the matrix: the British Petroleum experience	294
■ Beyond the matrix: cluster organization at British Petroleum Engineering Centre	295
■ Pan-European structures: balancing international co-ordination and local control	300
■ Primary design criteria: paradoxes and dualities	305
■ Summary: what is successful organization structuring?	308
■ Conclusions	311

CHAPTER NINE

External Resourcing
Recruitment, selection and assessment	315
■ Introduction	315
■ The nature of recruitment systems	318
■ Legislative context for recruitment in Europe	318
■ Labour market characteristics	322
■ Methods of external recruitment	329
■ National employment offices	330
■ Advertisements in newspapers and magazines	331
■ Recruitment consultancies, temping agencies and executive search	332
■ Targeting schools and colleges	334
■ Personal contacts	334
■ Graduate recruitment	335

Contents

■ The nature of selection	337
■ A typical selection process	338
■ Methods of selection	339
■ International comparisons of selection methods	340
■ Curriculum vitae and references	341
■ Application forms and biodata	341
■ Unstructured interviews	342
■ Structured interviews	343
■ Situational interviews	343
■ Handwriting analysis/graphology	344
■ Psychological tests	344
■ Assessment centres	346
■ Choosing selection methods	348
■ Reliability and validity of selection systems	348
■ Cost-benefit of recruitment and selection systems	354
■ Democratization of European selection systems	355
■ Conclusions	357

CHAPTER TEN

Internal Resourcing

Employee training and development (E15) 361

■ Introduction	361
■ The importance of ETD needs analysis	364
■ A change in the focus of ETD needs	366
■ The relationship between ETD systems and other areas of HRM	367
■ Conflicting pressures: convergence and divergence of ETD practices	368
■ Should organizations make managers for Europe or make managers in Europe?	369
■ ETD in its natural cultural context	371
■ National models of management development	373
■ Cultural and historical determinants of the notion of management	373
■ What does it take to become a manager? The implication for entry-point selection decisions	376
■ The impact of organizational structure on the role of managers	379
■ Differences in national management education and training systems	381
■ Education and vocational training systems in Europe	390
■ Trends in ETD within European organizations	392
■ Labour force mobility, job security and the quality of ETD	394
■ ETD at the Hoechst Group: a system in transition	396
■ The nature of management competencies	401
■ The skills and competencies of the Euro-manager	406
■ Organization strategy and different approaches to the Euro-manager	407
■ Future management competencies	412
■ Ensuring the cross-cultural validity of competencies: the British Petroleum experience	417
■ Strategic capabilities and organizational-level management competencies	419

■ Shifting the management development focus to top teams	421
■ Conclusions	423
CHAPTER ELEVEN
Internal Resourcing
Career management and the internationalization of managers	427
■ Introduction	427
■ The internal career: individual differences, career orientations and career anchors	429
■ Career dynamics as a reflection of national culture	432
■ Cultural differences in the external career	434
■ Internationalization of top teams and the mechanisms of corporate governance	437
■ European experience for non-European managers	438
■ Internal resourcing through Euro-graduates	439
■ The career aspirations of the Euro-graduate	441
■ The internal career assignment as a unit of analysis: objectives of expatriation	445
■ Recruiting and selecting expatriates	447
■ Training and briefing of expatriates	450
■ Managing adjustment and performance on international assignments	451
■ Expatriation as a source of control and external career socialization in European multinationals	455
■ Repatriation	458
■ Demonstrating the benefits: an evaluation of manager performance versus the costs	459
■ Career management systems	460
■ Identifying high potential: assessment centres or career development workshops	463
■ Development of potential through planned career progression	465
■ Limited Euro-manager mobility	466
■ Broadening the employee training and development agenda	469
■ European MNC strategies to internationalize their managers	469
■ Internationalization of managers through the creation of Euro-networks	472
■ Lateral development of managers: new career paths and new job designs	475
■ Conclusions	475
CHAPTER TWELVE
Work Design	478
■ Introduction	478
■ The impact of national business systems on work design	480
■ International differences in the attraction of scientific management or Taylorism	482

Contents

■ Diverging employer strategies on work organization in Germany, France and Britain	485
■ Four different work design strategies	485
■ Job rotation, enlargement and enrichment	486
■ Do theories of motivation apply across Europe?	489
■ Self-regulating work groups	492
■ The flexible organization	493
■ Flexible specialization or custom-made work organization	496
■ Participation and quality circles	498
■ The Swedish model: structural decentralization and group working	501
■ Do autonomous work groups improve organizational performance?	504
■ Linking incentive bonus schemes to team working	506
■ The Japanese lean system versus the Swedish model	508
■ Conclusions	510

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

Pay and Benefit Systems 513

■ Introduction	513
■ Cultural differences in pay and benefit systems	515
■ Dissatisfaction with reward systems	518
■ Contemporary pressures on compensation	520
■ How are organizations responding to these pressures?	523
■ Paying for performance	525
■ European differences in the individualization of performance	535
■ Fringe benefits	536
■ Flexible remuneration systems	537
■ Using non-cash benefits to motivate employees	539
■ Paying for skills	539
■ The issue of equal pay	543
■ Are we moving towards single European pay practices?	545
■ Pay, benefits and the drive to reduce unemployment	548
■ Conclusions	548

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Performance Management and Appraisal 551

■ The underlying assumptions of performance management	554
■ Variation in the role of performance evaluation and appraisal across Europe	555
■ The efficiency of the manager–subordinate relationship as a moderator of interest in performance management	557
■ Cultural differences in the manager–subordinate relationship: the French perspective on performance management	558
■ Main elements of a performance management system	560
■ Differences between performance management and management by objectives	561

■ HRM questions and resulting outcomes from a performance management system: Zurich Insurance Group	563
■ Why do so many performance management systems fail?	564
■ Under what conditions do performance management systems work best?	565
■ The role of the human resource function	567
■ Performance management systems to structure individual objectives: International Computers Ltd (ICL)	568
■ Performance management systems as a coaching tool to improve business performance: ICI Pharmaceuticals	569
■ Using performance management to introduce cultural change: PowerGen	571
■ Performance management systems and the appraisal process	572
■ Purpose of appraisal schemes	573
■ What should be appraised? Alternative performance criteria	575
■ Traditional techniques of measurement	575
■ Behaviourally anchored rating scales (BARS)	577
■ Appraisal interviews and interviewer style	577
■ Obstacles to effective performance appraisal	578
■ Characteristics of successful performance appraisals	580
■ Upward appraisals and multi-rater systems	581
■ Self- and peer appraisal	583
■ Appraisal by customers	584
■ Conclusion: an evolution in the use of appraisal schemes	585

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

Industrial Relations 588

■ Introduction	588
■ Major trends in European industrial relations	589
■ The political influence of trade unions	590
■ Level of union membership	590
■ Degree of unity between and within trade unions	592
■ Pattern of strike activity	592
■ Role of the state	596
■ Levels of collective bargaining	596
■ Implications of HRM for industrial relations	597
■ The flexibility issue	598
■ Changes in legislation reflecting greater flexibility	599
■ Demand for shorter working hours	599
■ Demand for employee participation	599
■ Internationalization of industrial relations	601
■ Key differences between countries	601
■ Trade union density and structure	601
■ Union responses to the economic climate	605
■ Managerial styles in industrial relations	605
■ Collective bargaining	607

Contents

■ Industrial conflict and strikes	607
■ Industrial democracy and employee participation	614
■ The Social Chapter: convergence, harmonization or diffusion?	620
■ Implementation of the Chapter	620
■ A new regime for industrial relations or fragmented social policy?	625
■ The social policy institutional framework in the EU	625
■ Conclusion	626

PART FOUR

Future Issues in European Human Resource Management

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

Emerging HRM Issues in the Late 1990s

Thinking European, acting through processes of transition	631
■ A need to understand the European perspective	631
■ European HRM in transition	633
■ New structural concepts for the 1990s: new HRM imperatives	637
■ Downsizing and delayering: proactive and reactive restructuring	638
■ New ways of competing and viewing structure: business process re-engineering	644
■ Evolving business recipes: convergence towards underlying business processes?	646
■ What does business process re-engineering entail?	647
■ Avoiding the trap of Taylorism	651
■ Implementation of business process re-engineering in Europe	653
■ HRM implications of business process re-engineering	655
■ The network organization	657
■ The virtual organization	659
■ A return to the industrial relations dimension	662

References	664
-------------------	-----

Subject Index	698
----------------------	-----