

Contents

List of tables	page	ix
Acknowledgements		xi
1 Introduction		1
Background to the research		1
Fawley revisited: case study findings from the Blue Book to 1985		4
Research outline		8
2 The search for industrial-relations strategy		11
Introduction		11
The rational approach		12
The rational approach and the reformist movement		13
The rational approach and recent industrial-relations debates on strategy		18
The rational approach and the radical school		20
The political approach		22
The symbolic approach		27
Conclusions		29
3 The nature and development of productivity bargaining in Britain		30
Introduction		30
Productivity bargaining and the growth of the managerial initiative in Britain		31
The definition of productivity bargaining		36
Productivity bargaining: a sub-type of collective bargaining		36
Productivity bargaining in contrast to payment by results		37
Productivity bargaining in contrast to unilaterally imposed change		39
Types of productivity bargaining		39

The 'comprehensive-detailed' type of productivity agreement	39
The 'partial' type of productivity agreement	40
The 'open-ended' type of productivity agreement	40
The 'framework' type of productivity agreement	41
The evolution of productivity bargaining: 1960–1985	42
The first phase: 1960–1966	43
The second phase: 1967–1970	44
The third phase: 1977–1979	47
The fourth phase: 1981–1985	47
Conclusions	50
4 The control implications of productivity bargaining	55
Introduction	55
Increased management control by shifting from a 'half-pay and half-effort' strategy to a 'full-pay and full-effort' strategy	55
Increased management control by shifting to a pluralist strategy for joint control	59
Increased management control through greater formalization	65
Conclusions	66
5 Case study background	69
Introduction	69
Research methodology	69
Business environment: the oil industry in general	72
Business environment: the Exxon parent company and the Esso U.K. refining operation	74
Refinery operations and industrial relations at Fawley	75
The Esso Fawley productivity agreements: 1960–1985	77
6 The Fawley Blue Book revisited	80
Introduction	80
The historical origins of the Blue Book	82
The content of the Blue Book	84
Past evaluations of the Blue Book agreements in practice	86
Blue Book evaluation: case study findings, 1960–1967	89
Reduction of overtime	90
Elimination of mates	96
Progress in job flexibility	97
Other Blue Book objectives	102
The Blue Book – workers' objectives: higher pay, no redundancy, fewer working hours	103
Assessment of results: economic, institutional and cultural	107

Contents

Economic results	107
Institutional results	110
Cultural results: changing attitudes towards change	113
Conclusions	113
7 Fawley's second generation productivity agreements: 1967-1971	116
Introduction	116
The process workers' productivity deals: 1967, 1968 and 1970	116
The interim process shift agreement: October 1967	116
The process shift agreement: March 1968	121
The process agreement: May 1970	124
The maintenance productivity deals: 1968 and 1969	125
The Transport and General Workers' Union (T.G.W.U.) non-craft maintenance workers' deal: October 1968	125
The craft unions' productivity deal: October 1968	126
1969 agreement covering both T.G.W.U. non-craft and craft maintenance workers	127
Conclusions	128
8 The 1970s and the advent of the open-ended productivity agreements	130
Introduction	130
The progressive approach agreement: April 1972	131
The 1975 maintenance deal: 'individuals working within related groups'	136
The process efficiency deal: 1975	142
The target approach agreement: March 1978 (subtitled 'maintenance effectiveness measurement')	144
Conclusions	146
9 Productivity bargaining in the 1980s: coping with the recession	148
Introduction	148
The process productivity agreement: October 1981	149
The maintenance enabling agreement: March 1982	153
Addendum	158
Conclusions	158
10 Offshoots of productivity bargaining: the staff status initiative and the increased use of contractor labour	160
Introduction	160
The growth of the staff status initiative	160

The compatibility of the staff status initiative with productivity bargaining	167
The rationale and logic for Fawley's movement to staff status	170
The growth of the contractor employment relationship	172
Why increase the use of contractor labour?	173
Problems associated with the use of contractor labour	176
Conclusions	179
1 The control implications of productivity bargaining reconsidered	180
Introduction	180
The dream of full-pay/full-effort; the strategy of labour-market internalization	180
Increased management control through the pluralist based strategy for joint control	187
Control over workers through the formalization of rules	191
Conclusions	195
2 Problems with operating a rational strategy: the relevance of the political approach	197
Introduction	197
Problems of design	197
Problems of negotiation	200
Problems of implementation	202
Problems of day-to-day operation	207
Conclusions	210
The perpetuation of productivity bargaining: the relevance of the symbolic approach	211
Introduction	211
Productivity bargaining as a symbol for the management of uncertainty and crisis	213
Productivity bargaining: the management of impressions	216
Productivity bargaining and careerism	222
Conclusions	229
Conclusions	230
Bibliography	234
Index	241

Tables

1	Productivity provisions negotiated in the late 1970s – U.K.	page	49
2	History of productivity bargaining in the U.K., 1960–1985		54
3	Reduction of overtime under the 1960 agreements		92
4	Labour and equipment costs before and after the Blue Book		109