

Preface	xi
Acknowledgements	xiii
List of Contributors	xv
INTRODUCTION	1
Peter J. McGoldrick
The retailing analogy	1
The retailing mix	3
Channels of distribution	4
Part One—DEVELOPING A RETAIL STRATEGY
1. THE FINANCIAL ENVIRONMENT	9
John Hughes
Introduction	9
1.1 Personal income and wealth	10
1.1.1 Personal incomes	10
1.1.2 Investment income and inherited wealth	12
1.2 Socio-economic, political and demographic trends	14
1.2.1 The mortgage market	14
1.2.2 The deposit savings market	16
1.2.3 The current account market	19
1.2.4 The equity based investment market	19
1.2.5 The life and pensions market	20
1.2.6 The consumer credit market	24
1.3 The regulatory environment	26
1.3.1 The 1986 Building Societies Act	26
1.3.2 The 1986 Financial Services Act	27
1.3.3 The impact of European regulation	28
1.4 The evolution of market structure	30
1.4.1 The rise of the efficient producer	31
1.4.2 Industry concentration	33
1.4.3 Financial conglomeration	33
1.5 The changing role of technology	35
1.5.1 IT and efficiency	35
1.5.2 IT and market development	36
Summary	38
Review questions	39
References	40

2. UNDERSTANDING THE FINANCIAL CONSUMER	41
Erica Betts
Introduction	41
2.1 Characteristics of financial services: implications for buyer behaviour	42
2.2 Needs and motives	44
2.2.1 Needs and solutions	44
2.2.2 Motive classification schemes	45
2.2.3 A multidimensional model of motivation	48
2.3 Consumer needs and bases for segmentation	50
2.3.1 Traditional, single variable bases	51
2.3.2 Hybrid, multivariate bases	53
2.4 The cognitive map	56
2.4.1 The learning process	57
2.4.2 Perception	59
2.4.3 Perceived risk	60
2.4.4 Risk tolerance and risk reducing strategies	62
2.4.5 Cognitive dissonance	63
2.5 Image and positioning	64
2.5.1 Components of image	64
2.5.2 Image measurement techniques	65
2.5.3 Positioning	66
2.6 Attitudes	67
2.6.1 Attitudes towards credit and debt	68
2.6.2 Attitudes towards savings and investment	70
2.7 Models of buyer behaviour	71
2.7.1 Attitude models in financial services	71
2.7.2 Comprehensive models	73
2.7.3 Alternative models of decision making for financial services	76
2.8 Loyalty and relationship marketing	78
2.8.1 Consumer loyalty	78
2.8.2 Relationship marketing—loyalty and profitability	79
Summary	80
Review questions	81
References	82
3. FORMULATING RETAIL STRATEGY	85
Roy Palmer and Monica Lucas
Introduction	85
3.1 Retail strategy frameworks	86
3.1.1 Frameworks and models	86
3.1.2 The corporate mission	90
3.1.3 Strategic audit—SWOT analysis	92
3.1.4 Product—market strategy	92
3.1.5 Competitive advantage and differentiation	94
3.1.6 Competing on capabilities	97
3.2 Segmentation and targeting	98
3.2.1 Examples of effective segmentation	99
3.2.2 Methods of targeting	105

3.3	Key elements of strategic implementation	107
3.3.1	Customer/non-customer definition	108
3.3.2	Product specification	109
3.3.3	Delivery system specification	109
3.3.4	Marketing and point of sale promotion	115
3.3.5	Customer service	116
3.3.6	Back office support functions	117
3.4	The major challenges ahead	118
3.4.1	General pressures on the industry	118
3.4.2	Which will be the winning strategies?	119
	Review questions	120
	References	121

Part Two—THE BRANCH NETWORK

4.	BRANCH LOCATION NETWORK STRATEGY AND THE HIGH STREET	125
	Steven J. Greenland
	Introduction	125
4.1	Outlet location and the branch network	125
4.1.1	Factors shaping the network strategy	126
4.1.2	Developments in telephone banking	126
4.1.3	Changes in UK networks and high street retailing	126
4.1.4	Branch numbers	127
4.1.5	ATM numbers	129
4.1.6	Branch specifications and appearance	129
4.1.7	The network hierarchy	130
4.1.8	Central place theory and branch networks	132
4.1.9	Closure: customer responses to rationalization and relocation	133
4.2	Location and branch evaluation procedures and techniques	135
4.2.1	The location/evaluation process	135
4.2.2	Market effectiveness and prioritization	135
4.2.3	Location evaluation techniques	136
4.2.4	More systematic approaches to branch location evaluation	141
4.2.5	Gravity models	141
4.2.6	Multiple regression	143
4.3	Town planning and the branch network	144
4.3.1	Planning perspectives on financial service outlets	144
4.3.2	Government guidelines and local planning restrictions	145
4.3.3	Refusal of branch applications	147
4.3.4	Attempts to win planning appeals	148
	Summary	150
	Review questions	151
	References	152
5.	RETAIL BRANCH SECURITY	154
	Malcolm Hughes
	Introduction	154
5.1	The context of retail branch security	154

5.1.1	Scale of the problem	154
5.2	Precautions and preventative measures	155
5.2.1	The roles of staff and trades unions in branch security	155
5.2.2	The role of the security industry	157
5.2.3	The role of the employers	158
5.2.4	The role of the government and government agencies	160
	Summary	161
	Review exercises	161
	References	162
6.	THE BRANCH ENVIRONMENT	163
	Steven J. Greenland
	Introduction	163
6.1	The changing role and face of UK branch design	163
6.1.1	The role of the branch	164
6.1.2	The increasing significance of branch design and a branch identity	165
6.1.3	Enhancing design efficiency	166
6.2	The evolution in branch design	166
6.2.1	Fifteen key aspects of branch design evolution	167
6.3	Branch design and reconfiguration programmes	173
6.3.1	Design teams and their effective organization	173
6.3.2	Branch design research phases	175
6.3.3	Roll out of reconfiguration programmes	176
6.3.4	The refurbishment process from branch selection to refit completion	176
6.3.5	Flexibility in the design concept	177
6.3.6	Organizing the design function and refurbishment programme	178
6.3.7	Future trends in UK reconfiguration programmes	178
6.4	Key considerations in retail branch design and evaluation	180
6.4.1	Atmospherics and the desired impact of the branch design	180
6.4.2	Components of the branch environment	181
6.4.3	Environment factors and branch user effects	182
6.4.4	How the branch environment is appreciated	184
6.4.5	The emotional impact of the designed environment	185
6.5	Measuring design performance and evaluating the branch environment	186
6.5.1	Techniques for assessing the fulfilment of design objectives	186
6.5.2	Branch productivity measures	186
6.5.3	Monitoring/observing branch activity	187
6.5.4	Survey research	187
6.5.5	In branch focus group discussions	188
6.5.6	Questionnaires and structured interviews	188
6.5.7	Design performance measures	189
6.5.8	A comparison of customer perceptions from modern and traditional style branches	189
6.5.9	The environmental audit	191
	Summary	192
	Review questions	194
	References	194

Part Three—OTHER ELEMENTS OF THE MIX

7. PRODUCT RANGE DEVELOPMENT	199
Peter J. McGoldrick
Introduction	199
7.1 Product development	200
7.1.1 Sources of ideas	200
7.1.2 Success factors	202
7.1.3 Product development strategies	204
7.1.4 Product development process	207
7.1.5 Adoption and diffusion	210
7.2 Managing the range	212
7.2.1 Developing the brand	212
7.2.2 Developing the range	214
7.2.3 Analysis of unit profitability	216
7.2.4 Portfolio analysis	217
7.2.5 Product life cycles	219
Summary	220
Review questions	221
References	222
8. PRICING OF FINANCIAL SERVICES	224
Malcolm Hughes
Introduction	224
8.1 The pricing of services in context	224
8.1.1 Pricing and the marketing mix	224
8.1.2 Price awareness and sensitivity	226
8.2 Theoretical considerations in the pricing of financial services	226
8.2.1 Elements of costs	227
8.2.2 Price–cost relationships	228
8.3 Financial services pricing in practice	230
8.3.1 The pricing of deposit and savings instruments	230
8.3.2 The pricing of equity shares and mutual funds	232
8.3.3 The pricing of mortgage and credit products	233
8.3.4 The pricing of life, pensions and general insurance	234
8.3.5 The pricing of payments systems	235
Summary	237
Review exercises	237
References	238
9. PROMOTION AND ADVERTISING	240
Yvette Kirk
Introduction	240
9.1 Advertising expenditure	242
9.2 Decisions in advertising	242
9.2.1 Budget determination	242
9.2.2 Media usage	244
9.2.3 Agency selection	246
9.2.4 Content and message	247

9.3	Mechanisms via which advertising may generate sales	248
9.3.1	Short term sales	248
9.3.2	Long term effects	250
9.4	Influences interacting with advertising	253
9.4.1	Relationship with the organisation	253
9.4.2	Relevance of advertised service	255
9.5	Effective advertising in the market	255
9.5.1	Television	256
9.5.2	Print	257
9.5.3	Direct mail and outdoor	258
9.6	Alternative promotional vehicles	259
9.6.1	Sponsorship	260
9.7	Evaluation of advertising	261
9.7.1	Measurement in terms of sales	261
9.7.2	Tracking studies	262
9.7.3	Area experimentation	262
9.7.4	Pre-testing techniques	263
	Summary	264
	Review questions	264
	References	266
10.	CUSTOMER SERVICE AND QUALITY	266
	Barbara R. Lewis
	Introduction	266
10.1	Customer service in context	266
10.1.1	Characteristics of service	266
10.1.2	The service environment	267
10.1.3	Benefits of good service	268
10.2	Defining service	268
10.2.1	Service encounters	268
10.2.2	Definitions of service quality	270
10.2.3	Dimensions of service	271
10.3	Measuring service quality	273
10.3.1	Customer perspectives on service	274
10.3.2	Small businesses—expectations of banks	277
10.3.3	Service levels—additional dimensions	278
10.3.4	Measurement issues	279
10.4	The role of personnel in service delivery	279
10.4.1	Internal marketing	280
10.4.2	Recruitment, training and rewards	280
10.4.3	Personnel—the research experience	281
10.5	Service delivery	283
10.6	Monitoring service quality	283
	Summary	285
	Review questions	285
	References	286
	Further Reading	287
	INDEX	289