
Contents

Preface and Acknowledgements /viii

Notes on Contributors /x

I Introduction: Un/Settled Multiculturalisms I

Barnor Hesse

No multiculturalism, please – we're British /3 The demise of the multiculturalist discourse /5 Race-relations and post-colonialism /10 Multiculturalism across the Atlantic /13 Multicultural transruptions /15 Residual and emergent transruptions /17 Diaspora formations, cultural entanglements /19 Between cosmopolitanism and the multicultural /25

Part I Diaspora Formations 31

2 Beyond Westphalia: Nations and Diasporas – the Case of the Muslim Umma 33

S. Sayyid

Over-stating the nation /34 The Muslim Umma /35 Redemption songs /37 Diaspora as an anti-nation /41 McDonalds@Mecca: Being at home in the world /44 The Umma and diasporic logics /47

3 Readings within a Diasporic Boundary: Transatlantic Black Performance and the Poetic Imperative in Sport 51

Brett St Louis

Packaging and unpacking black performance /53 'Race', mind, and body /57 Representing 'the race' and nation in mind and body /62 The poetic imperative and the art of resistance /65 Conclusion /70

- 4 The Chinese Takeaway and the Diasporic Habitus: Space, Time and Power Geometries 73
David Parker
 ‘Chinese in Britain’ or ‘British Chinese’? /75 The takeaway, the foodscape and the ethnoscape /77 The Chinese takeaway as a contact zone /80 The diasporic habitus /83 Routine racialization /85 Heterochronicity /89 A critical British Chinese diasporic habitus /91 Conclusion /92 Appendix: from El mar /94
- 5 Diasporicity: Black Britain’s Post-Colonial Formations 96
Barnor Hesse
 Loose ends: unravelling the Windrush symbol /97 Babylon makes the rules: another side of 1948 /100 Keep on movin’: regionally black journeys /102 Back to life, back to reality: pan-Africanism and post-colonialism /103 Nu colours: a black poetics of post-colonialism /106 Mind adventures: a genealogy of Black Britishness /112 Conclusion /118
- Part II Cultural Entanglements 121
- 6 (Dis)Entangling the ‘Asian Gang’: Ethnicity, Identity, Masculinity 123
Claire Alexander
 The new Asian folk-devil: the rise and rise of the ‘Asian gang’ /126 Making black masculinity visible /131 Representing black masculinities: (un)race-ing and gendering the ‘Asian gang’ /137 Critically researching young Asian men /139 Conclusion /145
- 7 Ragga Music: Dis/Respecting Black Women and Dis/Reputable Sexualities 148
Denise Noble
 Ragga dance-hall culture /149 Ragga music: ‘slackness’ versus ‘culture’ /151 ‘Big It Up’ – valuing black bodies /154 Eroticism and social power? /155 Batty riders, batty men and black body limits /163 Conclusion /166
- 8 Colonial Entanglements: the Discourses of Bermuda’s 1995 Referendum on In/Dependence 170
Roiyah Saltus-Blackwood
 Re-mapping the landscape /172 Colonial articulations and dis/appearing acts / 174 Political discourse and social dictates / 180 Conclusion / 183

9 Some Kind of White, Some Kind of Black: Living the Moments of Entanglement in South Africa and its Academy 185

Zimitri Erasmus

The context / 187 Whiteness waging its violence / 189
Questions of location / 190 Problematizing whiteness in the South African academy / 190 Coming to voice in the hostility of white dominance / 193 The power of black essentialism(s) / 194 Limitations of black essentialism(s) / 195
The difficulties of entanglement / 197 'Hi-bredie-ty' / 199
'The specifics are mine, the condition is common' / 200
Living the moments of entanglement / 201

10 Conclusion: the Multi-cultural Question 209

Stuart Hall

The multi-cultural/multiculturalism distinction / 209
Conditions of emergence / 212 The subaltern proliferation of difference / 215 The margins in the centre: the British case / 217 Disrupting the language of 'race' and ethnicity / 221 Unsettling 'culture' / 225 Unsettling the foundations of the liberal-constitutional state / 227 Beyond the existing political vocabularies / 231 Towards a new political logic / 236

Bibliography 242

Index 256