

Contents

Preface ix

Part I The background 1

- 1 Toward a theoretical reorientation 3
 - Finally, a true paradigm?
 - Using masters
 - Setting the path
- 2 The evolving focus on agency 13
 - In search of agency
 - Paradoxes of human experience
 - The swing of the theoretical pendulum
 - Toward a synthetic framework
- 3 On the shoulders of Marx 28
 - Why Marx?
 - Levels, aspects and modalities
 - The portrait of a human actor
 - The vision of social wholes
 - Praxis as the context of mediation
 - History as the mechanism of mediation
 - Agential and historical theory?

Part II The theory 49

- 4 Ontology of the constructed world 51
 - Overcoming dilemmas
 - The focus on structures
 - Individuals: autonomous but bridled
 - Sequential logic of the process
 - Choosing in the field of possibilities
 - Reflexive consciousness

Contents

- 5 The model of social becoming 87
 Setting the layout
 In the middle: agency and praxis
 Environments: nature and consciousness
 Enter time
 The becoming of social becoming
 The ultimate premise: human nature
- 6 Active and passive society 120
 The puzzle of social becoming
 Four levels of social structure
 Variety of agents and actions
 Forms of power: domination and hegemony
 Determinants of agency
- Part III The applications 147
- 7 Social movements: double morphogenesis 149
 Two selected interpretations
 Strategic research area
 External morphogenesis
 A cause or a carrier of change?
 Movements in the wider context
 Internal morphogenesis
 Toward a truly dynamic model
- 8 Revolutions: the peak of social becoming 168
 The idea of revolution: myth and theory
 The theory of revolution: new directions
 Revolution as a mode of social becoming
 The promise of agential and historical theory
- Notes* 181
Bibliography 193
Index 206