

Contents

Part I. Typology and grammaticalization

1. ‘Triangulation’ of diachrony, dialectology and typology: An overview 3
Terttu Nevalainen, Juhani Klemola and Mikko Laitinen
2. Bi-directional vs. uni-directional asymmetries in the encoding of semantic distinctions in free and bound person forms 21
Anna Siewierska and Dik Bakker

Part II. Diachrony and typology

3. Historical morphology from a typological point of view: Examples from English 53
Dieter Kastovsky
4. Typology and comparative linguistics: Jakobson revisited 81
Konstantin G. Krasukhin
5. Primary adjectives in English and German: Variation and change in diachrony and typology 99
Thomas Schöneborn
6. The concessive connective albeit: A diachronic corpus-based study 121
†Elina Sorva
7. Possessives and determiners in Old English 149
Cynthia L. Allen
8. Analytic of the samyn or synthetic its? The use of neuter possessives in Older Scots texts 171
Joanna Bugaj
9. Expressing human indefiniteness in English: Typology and markedness of pronouns 203
Mikko Laitinen

Part III. Dialectology and typology

10. Dialect and typology: Where they meet — and where they don’t 243
Werner Abraham

11. Somerset relativizers revisited Kirsti Peitsara	269
12. Resilient or yielding? Features of Irish English syntax and aspect in early Australia Clemens Fritz	281
Part IV. Dialectology, typology and diachrony
13. Negative indefinites: A typological and diachronic perspective on a Brabantic construction Johan van der Auwera, Ludovic De Cuypere and Annemie Neuckermans	305
14. The relatives who and what in northern East Anglia Patricia Poussa	321
15. Vernacular universals? The case of plural was in Early Modern English Terttu Nevalainen	351
Index of languages	371
Index of authors	373
Index of subjects	376