Notes on Contributors

JONATHAN BARRY joined the University of Exeter in 1985 after three years as Charles Webster's Research Assistant for his official history of the NHS at the Wellcome Unit in Oxford. He is now Senior Lecturer in History and Head of the School of Historical, Political and Sociological Studies. He has published extensively on urban and cultural history and the middling sort in early modern England, especially Bristol and the south west. He is currently working on several projects on the socio-cultural history of religion, witchcraft and medicine in the south west c.1640–1800.

VIRGINIA BERRIDGE is Professor of History at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, University of London. She is head of the History Group and of the newly established Centre for History in Public Health. Her research interests range from smoking, illicit drugs, alcohol and HIV/AIDS, to the recent history of public health. Her publications include Opium and the People: Opiate Use and Drug Control Policy in Nineteenth and Early Twentieth-Century England (2nd edn, Free Association Books, 1999); AIDS in the UK: The Making of Policy 1981–1994 (Oxford University Press, 1996); Health and Society in Britain since 1939 (CUP/The Economic History Society, New Studies in Economic and Social History, 1999); and Poor Health: Social Inequality Before and After the Black Report (Frank Cass, 2002).

LINDA BRYDER is Associate Professor in the Department of History, University of Auckland. Her first book, Below the Magic Mountain: A Social History of Tuberculosis in Twentieth-Century Britain (Oxford University Press, 1988), was based on her D. Phil. thesis supervised by Charles Webster. She is currently researching the history of the National Women's Hospital, Auckland. Her most recent publications include A Voice for Mothers: The Plunket Society and Infant Welfare in New Zealand 1907–2000 (Auckland University Press, 2003).

ANTONIO CLERICUZIO is Associate Professor of History of Science at the University of Cassino. He is the author of Elements, Principles and Corpuscles. A Study of Atomism and Chemistry in the Seventeenth Century (Dordrecht, 2000), and co-editor of The Correspondence of Robert Boyle (6 vols, London, 2001).

PIETRO CORSI is Professor of the History of Science at Paris 1 University, Panthéon-Sorbonne, and Director of Studies at the Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales, Paris. He is author of Science and Religion: Baden Powell and the Anglican Debate, 1800–1860 (Cambridge, 1988), based on a D. Phil. thesis supervised by Charles Webster, and Lamarck. Genèse et enjeux du transformisme 1770–1830 (Paris, 2001).
