

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	7
Introduction	9
Part I: The Popular Literature	19
Prefatory Remarks
A. The Translations	21
B. The Compendiums of Science	47
C. Physicotheology and Biblical Science	64
D. The Periodicals	87
E. Other German Sources for the Diffusion of the Sciences	117
Part II: The Poetry	133
Prefatory Remarks
1. Barthold Heinrich Brockes (1680—1740)	135
2. Carl Friedrich Drollinger (1688—1742)	144
3. Daniel Wilhelm Triller (1695—1787)	154
4. Gottfried Ephraim Scheibel (1696—1759)	158
5. Albrecht Jacob Zell (1700—1754)	161
6. Johann Jakob Bodmer (1698—1783)	163
7. Johann Christoph Gottsched (1700—1766)	170
8. Friedrich von Hagedorn (1708—1754)	180
9. Albrecht von Haller (1708—1777)	186
10. Christian Sendel (1719—1789)	191
11. Georg Heinrich Behr (1708—1761)	205
12. Samuel Gotthold Lange (1711—1781)	213
13. Christian Friedrich Zernitz (1717—1744)	218
14. Johann Peter Uz (1720—1796)	229
15. Christlob Mylius (1722—1754)	233
16. Nikolas Dietrich Giseke (1724—1765)	243
17. Johann Siegmund Leinker (1724—1788)	247
18. Friedrich Carl Casimir Freiherr von Creuz (1724—1770)	258
19. Johann Jakob Dusch (1725—1787)	273
20. Johann Friedrich Löwen (1727—1771)	283
21. Christoph Martin Wieland (1733—1813)	287
22. Other German poets whose works contain some relevant scientific material	294

Part III: A Summary of Scientific Themes	309
(1) Attitudes toward science	310
(2) Newton	311
(3) Cosmogony	313
(4) Astronomy	315
(5) Phenomena pertaining to the earth sciences	319
(6) Plant life	321
(7) Animal life	323
(8) Attitudes toward nature	326
(9) Comic episodes	329
Conclusion	331
Bibliography	334
Index	345

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book is based on my Ph.D. dissertation which was submitted to The Johns Hopkins University in May, 1966. It is with pleasure that I acknowledge the encouragement and guidance of Professor Harold Jantz. I am most indebted to him for the use of his private collection of books. There, amidst the sources, I began my research and made my first discoveries. I also want to express my gratitude to Joan C. Neikirk who proofread the manuscript and prepared the Index of Names. I received a generous grant from the Clark University Research Fund towards the completion and publication of this book.

Walter Schatzberg
Clark University
Worcester, Massachusetts