List of figures

5.1	Open access advantage for arXiv papers (based on ISI citation data)	47
5.2	Definition of citation latency	51
5.3	Citation latency measured across time	52
7.1	Researchers' reasons for publishing their work	66
7.2	Time taken to deposit an article in a repository	68
7.3	Ease of deposition of an article in a repository	69
7.4	Compliance of authors with an employer or research funder mandate to self-archive their articles	70
7.5	Methods of self-archiving used by authors to date	72
9.1	Result of a Google search	90
9.2	Content of Australian repositories, January 2006	93
9.4	Example of downloads by month	96
9.3	Example of download statistics, first screen	96
10.1	The economic cycle of scientific research publishing	102
10.2	Context-sensitive linking from PubMed Central to other online resources	105
12.1	Change in coverage of open access journals within ISI JCR from February to June 2004	124
14.1	Data and services layer in OAI-PMH	142
14.2	The research–publishing–funding cycle	147
18.1	Number of articles submitted per year for select journals published by Medknow Publications, 2003–2005	178
18.2	Percentage of articles from India and abroad for select journals published by Medknow Publications, 2005	179

18.3 Subscriptions of select journals from Medknow Publications, 2003–2005	179
20.1 Various visualisations of an ontology	196
20.2 An earlier window of downloads (pale line) may predict a later window of citations (dark line)	197
20.3 A small co-authorship graph depicting collaborations between scientists across topic and subject boundaries	198
20.4 Results of a simple chronometric analysis, showing collaboration via endogamy/exogamy scores	198
20.5 Time course of downloads and citations	199
20.6 Linked map of research entities	200
20.7 A social network analysis tool rendering an RDF graph	201
20.8 A self-organising map supporting navigable visualisation of a research domain	202

List of tables

5.1	Open access advantage for four journals, based on data from the NASA Astrophysics Data Service	48
10.1	Typical costs (January 2006) of publishing in an open access journal	107
12.1	Print publishing frequency of journals included in the 2005 JISC study	123
12.2	Net margin/surplus patterns – ten learned society journals	126
