

Table of contents

Introduction: A guide for the perplexed 1

- What are we up to? 1
- To whom are we talking? 3
- So what's the bottom line? 6
- An invitation 11
- Acknowledgments 11

PART I: THE STRUCTURAL DYNAMICS OF BECOMING AWARE

Chapter 1. The basic cycle

1.1 Overall presentation 15

- Entering into the inquiry* 15
- A working description: Three temporal horizons* 20
- Why a session?* 20
- Exemplary variations* 21

1.2 Epoche 24

- The three components of epoche* 24
- The suspension and its follow-ups* 26
- Redirection and letting-go* 31
- The difficulties of redirection* 34
- Pragmatic difficulties and help in overcoming them* 35
- Letting-go and the quality of attention* 37
- The basic structure of becoming aware: The double fold of reflection and affection* 41

1.3 Intuitive evidence 43

- Intuition as gesture and as process* 43
- The philosophical roots of intuition* 44
- The temporal dynamic of the intuitive act* 48
- The fragile lightning-bolt of the process of intuitive fulfillment:*
  - From emptiness to givenness-in-flesh-and-blood* 49
- Intuition and affectivity* 54

|  |    |
|--|----|
| Primordial intuition and imaginary eidetic variations | 55 |
| The three-part structure of insight                   | 58 |
| The mode of evidence as inserted in a background      | 61 |
| Criteria of appreciation and of completion            | 62 |

Chapter 2. The structure of a session

|   |    |
|---|----|
| 2.1 Expression  | 65 |
| Expression is an optional and multiform component                              | 65 |
| Expressions and linguistic descriptions  | 66 |
| When should a description be produced?   | 67 |
| The specific quality of suspension proper to descriptive verbalization         | 68 |
| The quality of the intuitive evidence proper to verbalization                  | 70 |
| Modalities of linguistic expression from the perspective of a research program | 73 |
| A sketch of the problems with descriptive categorization                       | 76 |
| 2.2 Validation  | 77 |
| What expression and validation have in common                                  | 77 |
| Validation is an optional and multifarious component                           | 78 |
| Structures of mediation: First-, second- and third-person positions            | 80 |
| Stages in the process of validation  | 85 |

Chapter 3. Surrounding events

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 3.1 Upstream and downstream                                   | 97  |
| 3.2 Apprenticeship and training                               | 99  |
| 3.3 Facets of apprenticeship                                  | 101 |
| 3.4 Progressive generativity of expertise                     | 102 |
| 3.5 Relation to mediation                                     | 103 |
| 3.6 The temporal generativity of motivation and after-effects | 107 |

PART II: THE MOTIVATIONS FOR THE STUDY OF EXPERIENCING

Chapter 4. The point of view of the researcher

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 4.1 The cognitives sciences             | 115 |
| (F. J. Varela)                          |     |
| The recent consciousness boom    | 115 |
| A three-way sketch               | 118 |
| Irreducibility: The basic ground | 119 |

Case studies 122

The notion of phenomenological data 125

Mutual enlightenment 127

4.2 Psychology and subjective experience: Introspection 129

(P. Vermersch)

A historical perspective on psychology and subjectivity 129

The initial evidence and the first critiques 130

The first improvements: Experimental introspection 136

Strategies of circumvention 145

Data relative to the first person point of view have not had any impact 148

Improvements on the way 151

Conclusion 153

Chapter 5. Concerning practice

(N. Depraz, F. J. Varela, P. Vermersch)

5.1 Introduction: Practice is the privileged site for grasping of experience 155

5.2 Embodied practices in cognitive science 155

5.3 A diverse philosophical background: Practical reason, pragmatism, praxis and habitus 159

5.4 The “handle” of cognition: The psychological view of knowing-how and coping with 163

5.5 Practitioners validate and enrich this level of analysis 167

Chapter 6. The philosophical challenge

(N. Depraz)

6.1 The place of experience in philosophy 170

The situation of Phenomenology with regard to the history of philosophy 171

Access to experience as a return to the “things themselves” 174

Phenomenological experience is neither empirical nor constructed: It is eidetic 177

The transcendental character of experience: Phenomenology as “transcendental empiricism” 182

6.2 The ways of the reduction 184

The ethos of the reduction 184

Ways in which the reduction is prepared 186

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Multiple access to the reductive attitude: The problematic of the ways | 192 |
| The ethos of the reductive subject                                     | 197 |
| Aids to the reduction  | 199 |
| Bearing and limits of phenomenological philosophy                      | 201 |

Chapter 7. Wisdom traditions and the ways of reduction

(F. J. Varela and N. Depraz)

|     |  |     |
|-----|--|-----|
| 7.1 | What do we mean by spiritual traditions?   | 205 |
| 7.2 | The practice of mindfulness (shamatha): The historical context                               | 207 |
|     | The grounding   | 207 |
|     | The consolidation   | 210 |
|     | The Mahayanist turn   | 210 |
|     | Tibet and the Vajrayanist turn  | 213 |
| 7.3 | Sitting practice and the phenomenology of experience   | 214 |
|     | The point of practice no.1: The shamatha method                                       | 215 |
|     | Point of practice no.2: Vispashyana   | 220 |
|     | Point of practice no.3: Tonglen and empathy   | 221 |
|     | Point of practice no.4: Natural spontaneity as second spontaneity                     | 223 |
| 7.4 | Relating back to other motivations   | 224 |
|     | Practice of shamatha sitting meditation and introspective psychology                  | 224 |
|     | Meditative practice of the three yanas and the phenomenological ways of the reduction | 225 |
|     | Where are we?   | 231 |

Open conclusion

233

Postface

237

References

241

Glossary of terms

253

Index

263