

Preface and acknowledgments	vii
Introduction: popular culture/cultural citizenship	1
The citizenship qualities of popular culture / Freedom and stricture / The politics of self-formation / Defining cultural citizenship in relation to popular culture / Usable stories, fictional rehearsal, and working through / Regarding method / Popular culture as (revolutionary) force / The chapters to follow
1 Ethnicity, football, and the nation	21
Dutch football and the Surinamese legion / Ethnography / Fan involvement as citizenship
2 Negotiating global popular culture	41
Dutch police series / International crime fiction / Practices of representation and the reader
3 Conservative feminism and the detective novel	61
Everyday feminism, the interpretive community, and cultural citizenship / A “good” detective novel and the ideal reader: the ambiguous status of the detective novel / Cultural citizenship and crime fiction reading
4 Masculinity and the merits of textual analysis as part of an audience study	79
On irritation / Masculinity and the text / Methodology and understanding popular culture

5	Critical viewership	96
	Post-feminist television / Web journalism and Ally McBeal and Sex and the City / “Jump the Shark” / The “Jump the Shark” response to Ally McBeal and Sex and the City / Conclusion
6	Children and the media	115
	Good intentions / Just for fun / Children’s cultural citizenship
7	Popular culture: a modern and a postmodern genealogy	135
	Modernism, popular culture, and gender / Postmodernism and gender in the popular culture project / Toward a new understanding of popular culture
	Concluding remarks	155
	Popular culture and cultural citizenship / Popular culture and civic disengagement / The art of listening to others
	References	160
	Index	172