

Contents

Preface and acknowledgements	page xi
1 Introduction	1
1.1 Linguistic similarities and relationships	1
1.2 Language change and linguistic reconstruction	6
1.3 Synchrony and diachrony	9
1.4 The organisation of this book	11
2 Three views of sound change	14
2.1 Introduction: types of sound change	14
2.2 The Neogrammarians	17
2.3 The Structuralists	24
2.4 The Generativists	32
2.5 The question of explanation	44
3 Sound change 2: the implementation problem	47
3.1 Introduction	47
3.2 Lexical diffusion	47
3.3 Lexical Phonology and sound change	56
4 Morphological change	69
4.1 Introduction	69
4.2 Analogy	70
4.3 Natural Morphology	97
5 Syntactic change 1: the Transparency Principle	107
5.1 Introduction	107
5.2 Earlier work on syntactic change	107
5.3 Lightfoot's (1979a) theory of syntactic change	116
5.4 Reactions and criticisms	123
5.5 Lightfoot and the principles and parameters model	129
6 Word order change and grammaticalisation: language change and general laws	138
6.1 Introduction	138
6.2 Typology and consistency in word order	139
6.3 Grammaticalisation	160

7	Semantic and lexical change	174
	7.1 Introduction	174
	7.2 Semantic change	174
	7.3 Lexical change: language internal creativity	190
8	Language contact	200
	8.1 Introduction	200
	8.2 Lexical borrowing	200
	8.3 Structural borrowing	209
	8.4 Convergence	213
	8.5 Conclusion	224
9	Linguistic variation	225
	9.1 Introduction	225
	9.2 Dialectology	226
	9.3 Sociolinguistics	232
10	Pidgins and creoles	253
	10.1 Introduction	253
	10.2 Pidgins	255
	10.3 Creoles	260
	10.4 The general relevance of pidgins and creoles	265
	10.5 The Language Bioprogram Hypothesis	270
11	Language death	284
	11.1 Introduction	284
	11.2 Language suicide	287
	11.3 Language murder: four case-studies	291
	11.4 Language death, pidginisation and creolisation	308
12	Linguistic evolution?	314
	12.1 Introduction	314
	12.2 Evolution 1	315
	12.3 Evolution 2	325
	12.4 Evolution 3	334
	Bibliography	341
	Index	353