

Preface	IX
---------------	----

Chapter I: A Matter of Definitions

I.1 Children's literature. Definition	1
I.2 Contemporary scholarly interest in children's literature. The revision of the decades. Interest in children's literature before 1700	2
I.3 The genres of children's literature according to intent and content ...	4
I.4 Girls' literature before 1700. Definition. Scholarly interest or the lack of it	5

Chapter II: The intended readers: girls

II.1 Secondary sources: Contemporary scholarship or the lack of it. Primary sources: Girls in the opinion of the sixteenth- and seventeenth-century pedagogues	9
II.2 Girls as women-to-be. Three stages of childhood for girls. Childrearing as a corrective measure	15
II.3 Reading as part of the childrearing process	24
II.4 Books provided, the intentions of the authors	31

Chapter III: The Home as an environment for reading

Introduction: Literacy in the 16th and 17th centuries	39
III.1 The home as haven and protection of girls, as their future work terrain	40
III.2 Education at home as an acknowledged practice. Eulogies as biographical data regarding home instructions. Education at the Courts. Education of the burgher daughter	42

Chapter IV: Books to be Read at Home

IV.1	Religious literature. Catechism and/as Primer. Combination alphabet-catechism. The catechism as reading, as children's literature, as girls' literature. Catechisms (Stephan Agricola, Erasmus Alberus, Martin Luther, Justus Menius, Andreas Musculus, Petrus Canisius, Georg Vogler.) Other confessional material. Dialogues (Nikolaus Herman, Johann Valentin Andreae.)	57
	Bible and Biblical material. Catechism-Bible combinations (Martin Luther, Georg Wicelius, Georg Vogler, Johann Valentin Andreae, Jacob Weller, Andreas Musculus.) Epistle and Gospel proverbs (Veit Dietrich, Andreas Fabricius, Johann Heermann.) Epistle and Gospel editions (Nikolaus Herman, Magdalena Haymair.) Rhymed Bible editions (Georg Oemler, Jakob Rauppe.) Biblical riddles (Michael Saxo.)	69
	Prayerbooks. The appearance of original prose for independent reading. Prayerbooks as staple reading for girls. The prayerbook as a devotional and behavioral guide. Popular prayerbooks that include prayers for girls (Johann Habermann, Johann Arndt, Georg Zeaemann, Philipp von Zesen, Johann Cundisius.) Catholic prayerbooks (Martin v. Cochem, Wilhelm Nakatenus.) Prayer collections by girls. The Book of Virtuous Example. Traditional roots but new audience. Three example sources: Bible, history, and nature. Canon of virtues exemplified in Biblical heroines. (Niklaus Herman, Conrad Porta Nikodemus Frischlin, Bartholomaeus Wagner, Adam Walasser.) Historical heroines, the Saints and martyrs (Heinrich Fabricius, Georg Rhaw, Niklaus Herman, Caspar Augustin, Johann Mathesius.) Examples from nature (Lucas Martini.) Combination Bible-history-nature (Michael Saxo.)	77
	Reflections on the Single State. Traditional roots, new audience: girls. Desirable virtues and capabilities. The role of reading for maidens (Philipp Jakob Spener, Johann Buszleben.) The preparation for marriage (Christine Sorgin.) Courtship manuals (Alhardus Moller.)	102
	Reflections on the Married State. Traditional roots, new audience including young children (Leonhart Culmann, Caspar Melissander, Niklaus Volckmar.) Parental advice (Elisabeth von Calenberg, Benigna von Solms, Hans Michael Moscherosch.)	108
	Lists of recommended books	112
IV.2	Secular books for girls. Their occurrence in the 17th century.	114
	Informational material. The newspaper (Kaspar v. Stieler.) Letters to and from girls. The Stammbuch.	114
	Secular books on manners. Translations from French and Italian (Johann von Stubenberg, the Hofmeisterin.)	117
	How-to Books. Cookbooks (Anna of Tyrolia, Arachne and Penelope.) Writing manuals (August Bohse.) Make-up manuals (Tobias Vogel.) . . .	119
	Fables. Recognized as example and fiction. The question of their appropriateness for children (Martin Luther, Burkhard Waldis.)	121

Chapter V: Schools

- V.1 The German school in the Middle Ages. German schools and sewing schools; their occurrence in towns and cities. Teachers. Teaching methods. Textbooks; primers, namebook, Cato, Cisiiojanus 123
- V.2 Lutheran schools. Girls' schools. Luther's advocacy, pedagogical intent. School ordinances. Schools for boys and girls; historical realities; students' background, facilities, teachers. Theories of school reform in the 17th century (Amos Comenius, Wolfgang Ratichius, Johann Valentin Andreae.) Success and failure. Textbooks. Textbooks for girls' schools. Primers (Andreas Musculus.) Catechisms (Johann Agricola, Martin Luther, Justus Menius, Andreas Musculus.) Catechism plays (Christoph Heitfeld, Niklaus Herman.) Biblical material (J. Toltz, Valentin Trotzendorf.) Dialogues (Leonhart Culmann.) Prayers and songs (Martin Luther, Andreas Musculus.) Book of virtuous example (Johann Jhan.) Books for boys and girls. Combination Catechism-Biblical material (Sebastian Starcke, Lukas Martini.) Biblical material (Niklaus Herman, Magdalena Heymair.) Songs (W. Figulus.) New Reading Material in the 17th century. (Konrad Dieterich, Johann Saubertus.) 128
- V.3 Catholic Schools. Status in the 16th century. The visitations; issues of orthodoxy, separation of the sexes, literacy. Facilities. Advocates. The new teaching orders (Augustinians, Salesians, Ursulines, Englische Fräulein.) 152
- Textbooks. Primers and traditional readers. Catechisms (Petrus Canisius, Georg Wicelius, Johann Gröpfer, Georg Vogler.) Prayers and songs, the Calendars. Books of virtuous example 159

Chapter VI: The Cloisters

- VI.1 Situation before the Reformation. The cloister as a care institution for women; its role within society. Literacy; functional in the cloister; literate activities; the cloister libraries; writing. The education of novices and non-novices. Education; teachers, methods, textbooks 165
- VI.2 The Reformation. Sequestration. The attempt to continue the cloister as an educational institution; as a care institution. Reading material (Ioachim Lesebergius, Bartholomaeus Bothe.) 172
- VI.3 Catholic Cloisters after the Reformation. Tridentine Reform; enforcement of enclosure; education of young novices. The Stifte 176

Chapter VII: Catechesis

	The Catechesis as the only possibility of non-reading girls to hear written material. Working youth, servant girls	179
VII.1	The Lutheran Catechesis. The sexton school as Catechesis or school. The sermon, the children's church song. Catechisms which mention girls as audience. Baumgarten's Catechism and the Catechism-legend. The daughters of Eve as good and bad examples	179
VII.2	The Catholic Catechism. The Catechesis of the Jesuits. The Devotessen and the Catechism. Sunday school as precursor of the girls' school. Catechisms which mention girls as audience. The children's church song. Catechism plays	183

Chapter VIII: The Trouble with Trivia, Novels

VIII.1	Origin	189
VIII.2	Women as authors, patrons, readers (Elisabeth of Nassau-Saarbrücken, Eleonora of Scotland, Mechthild of the Palatinate.) Literary records of girls as readers	189
VIII.3	Detractors. Novels as untrue, un-German, immoral, uneducational (Juan Luis Vives, Gabriel Putherbeus, Agrippa von Nettesheim, Aegidius Albertinus, Hans Michael Moscherosch.) Attempts to replace the novel with more appropriate reading material	192
VIII.4	New trends (Heinrich Anselm von Zigler)	197
	Conclusion	199
	Bibliography of 16th and 17th century sources	202
	Bibliography of secondary sources	226
	Index of persons	257
	Subject Index	265