Introduction	1
Hans C. Boas and Mirjam Fried
I. Syntactic patterning
CHAPTER 1
Definite null objects in (spoken) French: A Construction-Grammar account	13
Knud Lambrecht and Kevin Lemoine
1. Introduction	13
2. Types of complement instantiation	15
3. Different types of interpretation of null complements	19
4. Definite null complements as ratified topics	38
5. Syntactic and methodological implications	47
Notes	50

CHAPTER 3

Argument structure constructions
and the argument-adjunct distinction 71

Paul Kay

1. Introduction 71
2. Goldberg's analysis 73
3. Preliminary sketch of the maximal subconstructions 76
4. Representation of the RC constructions 78
5. Inherent arguments, added arguments and adjuncts 86
6. Conclusion 95

II. Syntax and semantics of verbs

CHAPTER 4

The role of verb meaning in locative alternations 101

Seizi Iwata

1. Introduction 101
2. Analysis of locative alternation 102
3. Comparison with Goldberg (1995) 106
4. Alternations that cannot be attributed to a single scene 109
5. The significance of verb meaning 114
6. Conclusion 116

CHAPTER 5

Verbal polysemy and Frame Semantics in Construction Grammar:
Some observations on the locative alternation 119

Noriko Nemoto

1. Introduction 119
2. Previous studies 120
3. Goldberg's (1995, 2002) constructional approach 123
4. An alternative constructional analysis 126
5. The semantics of the onto- and from-forms 131
6. Conclusion 133

III. Language variation and change

CHAPTER 7

Integration, grammaticization, and constructional meaning 157*Ronald W. Langacker*

1. Introduction 157
2. Comparison 157
3. Basic notions of Cognitive Grammar 164
4. Degree of conceptual integration 172
5. Import for grammaticization 177
6. Conclusion 186

CHAPTER 8

Constructions and variability 191*Jaakko Leino and Jan-Ola Östman*

1. Introduction and aim 191
2. Variation, variability, and language change 192
3. Variability in Construction Grammar 193
4. Free variation: Constructions and conceptualizations 194
5. Variation across paradigms: Value pools 200
6. Variability through analogy: Metaconstructions 204
7. Conclusion 209
