CHAPTER 1
Introduction	1
1.1 Phenomena	1
1.2 Theoretical framework	5
1.2.1 Previous studies of particles and considerations of terminology	5
1.2.2 Pragmatics and Japanese interactional particles	8
1.2.3 Functional linguistics to interactional linguistics	9
1.2.4 Conversation analysis	12
1.3 Objectives	18
1.4 Data	21
1.5 Organization of the study	23
CHAPTER 2
Review of previous research: Aspects of Japanese particles	25
2.1 Final particles vs. insertion particles	25
2.2 Syntagmatic analysis	27
2.3 Association with gender	30
2.4 Association with speech style	31
2.5 Association with modality	33
2.6 Cognitive approaches	38
2.7 Indexicality	43
2.8 Intonation	43
2.9 An interactional perspective	46
2.10 Summary of Chapter 2	47

CHAPTER 3

Interactionally-relevant units

49

- 3.1 Do “final particles” actually occur at final positions? 51
 - 3.1.1 “Sentence-final” position vs. “sentence-internal” position 51
 - 3.1.2 Beyond the sentential notion of interactional particles 58
 - 3.1.3 Turn-final vs. turn-internal use 59
- 3.2 What kind of unit is being made relevant by these particles? 69
 - 3.2.1 Intonation units 70
 - 3.2.2 Pragmatic completion points 74
 - 3.2.3 Interactionally relevant units 77
- 3.3 Summary of Chapter 3 91

CHAPTER 4

Interactional particle ne

95

- 4.1 Introduction 95
- 4.2 Alignment in action 97
- 4.3 Ne in action initiation 99
 - 4.3.1 Turn initial position of initiating an action 99
 - 4.3.2 Ne with “pre-starts” 103
 - 4.3.3 How ne subserves to elicit an specific action 105
 - 4.3.4 Indication of ne-speakers’ interactional concerns as local pragmatic work 115
- 4.4 Ne in assessment 119
 - 4.4.1 Obligatory marking with ne 121
- 4.5 Ne in other responsive positions 131
- 4.6 Ne in questions 135
 - 4.6.1 Cases with the question marker ka plus the interactional particle ne 137
- 4.7 Ne in the third position of question sequences 142
- 4.8 Summary of Chapter 4 147
- 4.9 Conclusion 149

CHAPTER 5

Interactional particle sa

153

- 5.1 Introduction 153
 - 5.1.1 Previous studies of sa 156
 - 5.1.2 Negotiability of the talk’s elements 158
- 5.2 Prospective non-negotiability in actions 160

5.3	Sa in disjunctive actions	162
5.3.1	Marking onset of different phases in activity	162
5.3.2	Marking a topic change	170
5.3.3	“ Unilateral departure ”	175
5.4	Prospective non-negotiability of other kinds of moves	181
5.4.1	Temporarily shifting the focal referent as a prospective non-negotiable move	182
5.4.2	Prospective non-negotiability in the initiation of assessment	184
5.5	Repetitive use of sa in narratives	195
5.6	Summary of Chapter 5	206

CHAPTER 6

Concluding remarks

6.1	The notion of the unit in Japanese talk	211
6.2	Particularized functions	214
6.3	Learning to use interactional particles	217
6.4	Interactional particles and speech style	219
6.5	Towards a better understanding of the practices of social order	220
6.6	Conclusion	221
