

Contents

Editor's foreword	vii
Acknowledgements	xi
Introduction	1
1 Misunderstanding Brecht: the critical scene	5
The German reception	7
The English reception	8
Is Brecht dead?	10
The poststructuralist reception	14
2 Brecht in theory and practice: refunctioning the theatre	24
Non-Aristotelian theatre	25
The epic model	31
Towards a dialectical theatre	36
3 Theory in praxis: comedy as discourse	49
Estrangement and comedy	51
Disturbing the gaze	55
The comic return of the repressed	59
Towards a Marxist theory of comedy	62
4 Placing the theory: Brecht and modernity	68
The Brecht/Lukács dispute	69
The Brecht/Benjamin partnership	75
Adorno against Brecht	80
Towards a revolutionary art	85

5	Brecht and postmodernism: theatricalizing the unrepresentable	90
	The postmodernist debate	91
	The aesthetics of early Brecht: Baal and In the Jungle of the Cities	98
6	The Brechtian postmodern	113
	Expropriating Brecht: the dance theatre of Pina Bausch	115
	Refunctioning Brecht: the shocks of Heiner Müller	122
	Conclusion	138
	References	141
	Index	149