Contents

Introduction 1
1. Bi-planar Semiotics 3
1.1. Saussure 3
1.2 Hjelmslev 5
1.3 Two basic assumptions of bi-planar semiotics 5
2. A temporary leap of faith 6

Part I

Chapter One
The syntactico-semantic paradigm of irony: and beyond 11

1. General formulae of irony 17
2. Referentiality: the ontological status of the entities articulated in irony 21
3. Taxonomy 30
4. Syntax 35
5. The indices of irony 41
6. Towards a pragmatics of ironic context 44
7. 'Miscellaneous' and 'specificity': the uncontained residue of rhetoric 51
8. Five semiotic formulae 58
9. Paradigmatization of the correlations between the rhetorical and the semiotic meta-languages of irony and the resultant view of the ontological status of irony 63
9.1 Explanation of Table I 63
10. Conclusion: the rhetorical episteme 64

A kind of postscript to chapter one 71

Part II

Chapter One
An ironic twist of a semiotics of narrative: Friedrich Schlegel's Roman 91

1. Five semiotic formulae (1.1–1.5) 92
1.1 Binary opposition of semantic units – signifieds associated with a particular enunciated or signifier 92
1.2 "Isotopie" of the unhappy consciousness 96
1.3 Dislocation of codes 100
1.4 Anachrony between temporal levels of narrativity . . 106
1.5 Parabasis of mimesis and diegesis 111
2. "Individual relativism of speech perception" 114
3. Crises confronting the semiotics mode 118
4. Partiality of semiotic solution to irony 119

Chapter Two
Irony the iconoclast: The crisis of representation 133
1. Hegelian Phenomenology versus Schlegelian Irony 142
1.1 Form and content, the representational model/mimesis 143
1.2 Subject and Object: the phenomenological synthesis 146
1.3 Anthropomorphic content 147
1.4 The death of art at the hands of irony 150
1.5 The surpassing of art by the Absolute 152
1.6 Conclusion 156
2. The negative dialectics of irony 157
2.1 Mimesis versus non-identity 157
2.2 Non-identity of subject and object 159
2.3 The preponderance of the subject versus deanthropomorphization 160
2.4 The Absolute versus the fragment 161
2.5 The death of art versus utopia 169
3. Adorno versus Schlegel: The fragmented connection . . . 172
3.1–3.2 The unsynthesized antitheses 173
3.3 The autonomy of art 174
3.4–3.5 Art as System versus Art as communication . . 175
4. Schelling versus Schlegel: recuperation versus praxis . . . 176

Chapter Three
"Über die Unverständlichkeit": Irony as communicational deconstruction of the semiotic paradigm 183
1. Irony of semantic exchange 185
1.1 The golden book: irony of exchange value 185

1.2 The ironic flux of signifieds around the term "irony" 188
2. Irony of the "Isotopy" 194
3. The (inter)-semiosic irony of analysis 202
3.1 Intertextuality and (sym)-semiosis 202
3.2 "Ideologemes" of (sym)-semiosis 210
4. Irony of codes 212
4.1 A-coding 213
4.2 Recuperation of ironic codes 215
4.3 The relativity of code postulation 216
4.4 Linguistic versus cybernetic code-theory 218
5. Irony of temporal distinctions 223
5.1 The primordial cleavage 223
5.2 The vanishing point 225
5.3 The continuum of "U.d.U." 226
5.4 Constant narration 230
5.5 Times of reception 236
5.6 Impersonalization of Discourse 238
6. Irony of the ontological status of the subject of enunciation 240
6.1 Does "he" imply an I? 241

Conclusion
1.1 The revolutionary function of irony 261
1.2 Beyond the classical model of Science 264
1.3 Beyond metalanguage about irony 267
1.4 Epilogue 269

Bibliography 273

Index of Names 285

Index of Subjects 289