CONTENTS

List of Illustrations
Acknowledgements
Introduction 13

Part One: Defining Parody

1. Ways of Defining Parody 17
   1.1 Etymology 18
   1.2 The Comic Effect in Parody 19
   1.3 Imitation and Incongruity 21
   1.4 Signalling Parody 25
   1.5 The Reader 26
   1.6 Attitudes of the Parodist 28
   1.7 Ambivalence and the Concept of General Parody 33

2. Distinguishing Parody from Related Forms 39
   2.1 Limits of the Term Burlesque 39
   2.2 Persiflage, Plagiarism and ‘Pekoral’ 41
   2.3 The Literary Hoax and Pastiche 41
   2.4 Satire and Parody 44
   2.5 Parody, Quotation and ‘Cross-Reading’ 49
   2.6 Parody-Irony 51

Part Two: Theory of Parody

Introduction 59

3. Parody as Meta-Fiction 61
   3.1 The Meta-linguistic Functions of Parody 61
   3.2 General Parody and Parodistic ‘Meta-Fiction’ 65
   3.3 The Parodist as Author and Reader 69
   3.4 ‘Higher-Order Actions’ and the Problems of Meta-Criticism 79
   3.5 ‘Showing How’ in Parody 88
   3.6 Self-Parody 96
4. The Parodistic Episteme: Questioning Reflection and Reflexion 107

4.1 Parody and the Verification of Statements made in Fiction 108

4.2 ‘The Implied Reader’: Phenomenological Approaches to Parody 114

4.3 The ‘Absent’ Reader and the Iterability of the Text 124

4.4 Les Mots et les Mots: The Function of Parody in our Episteme 128

4.5 The Role of Literary Parody in Transforming Literary History 157

4.6 Towards a Sociology of Parody 165

Conclusion 185

Bibliography 189

Index 195
ILLUSTRATIONS

2. Gunther Witting, 'Dürer's Rabbit' , 1977. 91
3. René Magritte, 'Ceci n'est pas une pipe' , 1928/9. 92
5. Klaus Staeck, For the Union of German Authors, 1977. 118