

Contents

Preface	xii
Part I: Women in Nordic politics
1	3
Introduction: Scandinavia: a case apart
Lauri Karvonen and Per Selle
Is the political gender gap really closing?	3
Perspective: numbers count and politics makes a difference	6
Content: women in Nordic politics	12
Women as voters and party members	13
Women in the organizational society	14
Women within public institutions	17
Women's attitudes and symbols	19
Beyond Scandinavia	21
Conclusion	21
Epilogue	22
References	22
2	25
The political representation of women: a bird's eye view
Nina Cecilie Raaum
Women and political power: what does the research tell us about women's political practice?	25
Ways of understanding women's political status	27
Territorial representation: elected bodies	33
The corporative system of government: government committees	42
Summary and further challenges	49
References	51

Part II: Women as voters and party members

3	Gender gaps in Nordic voting behaviour	59
	Maria Oskarson
	Gender and voting	59
	The Nordic party systems	65
	Party choice of men and women	67
	Gender differences among young and old voters	71
	Gender differences and the public sector	75
	Conclusion: is there any gender gap?	75
	References	80
4	Women in Scandinavian party organizations	83
	Jan Sundberg
	The problem	83
	The pioneering role of female members in the social democratic parties	85
	Female membership in Scandinavian parties at large	91
	Female power in Scandinavian parties	95
	The nomination of female candidates	101
	The silent revolution revised	106
	References	108

Part III: Organizational participation

5	Social democracy, women, and the European union	115
	Ulf Lindström
	The problem	115
	Theoretical framework	115
	The social democratic impasse	118
	Social democracy, Europe and the world according to the market-patriarchate, public, and tripod households	120
	In search of social democratic Europe	125
	Out of the impasse: the Euro-contract?	127
	Corollary	129
	References	130

6	Trade unions and the feminization of the labour market in Scandinavia	133
	Lauri Karvonen
	Introduction	133
	Women in the work force	135
	Women in Scandinavian trade unions	138
	Impact	145
	Conclusion	151
	References	151
 7	 The changing role of women within local voluntary organizations: sex segregation in the voluntary sector	 155
	Per Selle and Bjarne Øymyr
	Introduction	155
	Growth and transformation	157
	Organizational transformation and the changing sex composition of the voluntary society	160
	Are young women more like men?	162
	Characteristics of the dead, the new and the surviving organizations in the 1980s	167
	Differences between the 'surviving', the 'dead' and the new organizations of the 1980s	170
	Discussion and conclusion	172
	References	173
 8	 An alternative movement in a 'state-friendly' society: the women's shelter movement	 177
	Kristin Morken and Per Selle
	Introduction	177
	Wife-battering: from private to public problem	178
	The women's shelter movement: volunteer work in a social movement	180
	From theory to reality: from movement to organization	184
	Women's shelters: autonomous work, public money	187
	Will the '90s be a period of consolidation?	193
	Discussion and conclusion: what does the women's shelter movement express?	197
	References	200

Part IV: Public institutions

9	The declining corporatist state and the political gender dimension	205
	Christina Bergqvist
	Introduction	205
	The challenge against the male-dominated state	210
	The hidden side of the recruitment process	218
	Conclusion: the relevance of gender in the corporatist state	223
	References	226
10	Feminization of the central public administration	229
	Per Lægreid
	Introduction	229
	Feminization of public administration	231
	Explaining the feminization of central public administration	239
	The effects of increased female representation	241
	Conclusion: from movement to management	244
	References	246
11	Women in local democracy	249
	Nina Cecilie Raaum
	From state feminism to local democracy?	249
	Lags in time and space	252
	The impact of structure, culture and politics	263
	The extreme cases: 'minimum kommune' and 'maximum kommune'	273
	Conclusion: structure and culture count, but politics decides	277
	References	279
12	How the election system structure has helped women close the representation gap	281
	Richard E. Matland
	District magnitude	282
	Candidate selection processes	290
	Summary	304
	References	305

Part V: Attitudes and Symbols

13	A gender gap that vanished: tolerance and liberalism	313
	Lise Tøgeby
	Introduction	313
	The concept of 'tolerance' and its operationalization	317
	Political tolerance in Denmark 1971	319
	The development from 1971 to 1990	326
	Discussion and conclusion	333
	References	336
14	Political language	343
	Lauri Karvonen, Göran Djupsund and Tom Carlson
	Introduction	343
	The extent of women's representation	344
	Linguistic differences between men and women	346
	Empirical analysis I: parliamentary debates in Norway	350
	Empirical analysis II: election campaigns in Finland	357
	Summary and conclusions	371
	Bibliography	377
	References	377

Part VI: Beyond Scandinavia

15	Caught in the 'virgin trap': Nicaragua as a cultural contrast	383
	Einar Berntzen
	Introduction	383
	The cultural tradition	384
	The Sandinista Revolution	388
	Women's organizations	394
	'The Committees of Mothers of Heroes and Martyrs' or the return of marianismo	396
	Conclusion: 'what difference does a revolution make?'	398
	References	399
	Contributors	403