

Contents

Acknowledgements

page vii

Introduction: Arthur Dent, Screwtape and the mysteries of story-telling	1
1 Postmodernism, grand narratives and just-so stories	14
Postmodernism and grand narratives	14
Just-so stories	23
Narrative and irony	32
Language, culture and reality	46
2 Newton and Kissinger: Science as irony?	54
Said, Kissinger and Newton	54
Revolutions and paradigms	62
Models of reality	71
Ambiguity and irony	81
3 Learning to say 'I': Literature and subjectivity	94
Interior and exterior worlds	94
The idea of literature	107
The ideal of the fragment	114
Two kinds of truth?	121
4 Reconstructing religion: Fragmentation, typology and symbolism	128
From religion to religions	128
Religions of nature and of the heart	135
Millenarian fragments and organic wholes	141
The aesthetics of irony: Keble and Rossetti	148
5 The ache in the missing limb: Language, truth and presence	157
Coleridge: The language of the Bible	157
Newman: The physiognomy of development	170

	Polanyi: The origins of meaning	179
	Steiner, Derrida and Hart: Presence and absence	189
6	Twentieth-century fundamentalisms: Theology, truth and irony	195
	Rorty: Language and reality	195
	Postmodernism and poetic language: Religion as aesthetics	207
	Logos and logothete: Reading reality	217
7	Science and religion: Language, metaphor and consilience	225
	Etching with universal acid	225
	Language as change	233
	A rebirth of images	239
	The fabric of the universe	247
	Concluding conversational postscript: The tomb of Napoleon	256
	Bibliography	264
	Index	274