1 Basic observations	1
1.1 What is definiteness?	1
1.1.1 Simple definites and indefinites	1
1.1.2 Familiarity and identifiability	2
1.1.3 Uniqueness and inclusiveness	7
1.1.4 Identifiability, inclusiveness and indefinites	12
1.1.5 A unified account?	13
1.2 Types of definite noun phrase	15
1.2.1 Testing for definiteness	15
1.2.2 Demonstratives	17
1.2.3 Proper nouns	21
1.2.4 Possessives	22
1.2.5 Personal pronouns	26
1.2.6 Universal quantifiers	32
1.3 Simple and complex indefinites	33
1.3.1 Indefiniteness and cardinality	33
1.3.2 Complex indefinites	36
1.4 The noun phrase	41
1.5 Definiteness beyond the noun phrase	45
2 Simple definites and indefinites	47
2.1 Definiteness and indefiniteness marking	47
2.1.1 The occurrence of articles in languages	48
2.1.2 The distribution of definites and indefinites	51
2.2 Definites: semantic content and behaviour	52
2.2.1 Optional definite articles	52
2.2.2 Anaphoric articles	53
	ix

2.2.3	Deictic distinctions	55
2.2.4	Definite and specific	57
2.2.5	Nominalizing and other functions	60
2.3	Definite article types	62
2.3.1	Free-form articles	63
2.3.2	Bound articles	68
2.3.3	Phrasal clitics	72
2.3.4	Mixed systems and double determination	77
2.3.5	Definite adjectives	82
2.4	Other ways of expressing definiteness	86
2.4.1	Adpositional marking	86
2.4.2	Agreement	86
2.4.3	Pronominal marking	88
2.4.4	Word order	88
2.5	Indefinites	89
2.5.1	Indefinite article	89
2.5.2	Quasi-indefinite article	95
2.5.3	Types of cardinal article	100
2.5.4	Partitive indefinites	100
2.5.5	Bare indefinites	103
2.6	General remarks	105
3	Complex definites and indefinites	107
3.1	Demonstratives	107
3.1.1	Deictic distinctions	107
3.1.2	Non-deictic distinctions	113
3.1.3	Forms and positions	116
3.2	Proper nouns	121
3.3	Possessives	124
3.3.1	Pronoun and full noun phrase possessives	124
3.3.2	Affixal possessives	125
3.3.3	Alienable and inalienable	128
3.3.4	Possessives and definiteness	130
3.4	Personal pronouns	134
3.4.1	Semantic and grammatical content	134
3.4.2	Strong, weak and null pronouns	137
3.4.3	Personal determiners	141
3.4.4	Definite and demonstrative personal forms	145
3.5	Universals and other quantifiers	148

3.6	Indefinites	148
3.6.1	Full noun phrases	149
3.6.2	Pronouns	150
3.7	Indefinite demonstratives	151
3.8	Vocatives	152
3.9	Non-configurational languages	153
4	Some semantic and pragmatic distinctions	157
4.1	One definiteness or several?	157
4.1.1	Identifiability and inclusiveness	158
4.1.2	Anaphoric and non-anaphoric definites	158
4.1.3	“Deictic” and non-“deictic” definites	160
4.2	Specificity and referentiality	165
4.2.1	Opacity and scope ambiguities	166
4.2.2	Transparent contexts	170
4.2.3	A unified account of specificity?	172
4.3	Generics	179
4.3.1	Generics in English	181
4.3.2	Singular generics	184
4.3.3	Non-singular generics	189
4.3.4	Generics and proper nouns	193
4.4	Concluding comments	198
5	Interaction with other grammatical phenomena	199
5.1	Direct object marking	199
5.1.1	Differential case marking	200
5.1.2	Definite object marking	202
5.1.3	Oblique direct objects	205
5.2	Verb agreement	207
5.2.1	Direct object agreement	207
5.2.2	Indirect object agreement	211
5.2.3	Subject agreement	212
5.3	Definiteness and animacy	213
5.4	Articles and nominal feature marking	215
5.5	Null and implicit noun phrases	219
5.5.1	Pro	220
5.5.2	Traces	221
5.5.3	PRO	223
5.5.4	Implicit arguments	223

5.6 Classifiers	225
5.7 Concluding point	226
6 Definiteness effects	227
6.1 Discourse structure	227
6.1.1 The organization of information	227
6.1.2 Information structure and definiteness	232
6.2 Existential sentences	236
6.2.1 The phenomenon	237
6.2.2 Explanatory accounts	241
6.3 Other definiteness effects	246
6.3.1 Superlatives	246
6.3.2 PP-extraposition and any opacity	248
6.3.3 Property predication	249
6.3.4 Internal-head relatives	250
6.3.5 Concluding remarks	251
7 Defining definiteness	253
7.1 The grammatical, logical and pragmatic traditions	253
7.2 Hawkins: inclusiveness and location	260
7.2.1 Shared sets, inclusiveness and exclusiveness	260
7.2.2 Subsequent developments	262
7.3 Definiteness and quantification	265
7.3.1 Milsark and the quantification restriction	265
7.3.2 Generalized quantifiers	266
7.3.3 Discourse semantics: Heim	268
7.4 Relevance theory	271
7.5 Well, what is definiteness then?	274
7.5.1 Grammaticalization	275
7.5.2 Grammaticalization and definiteness	277
7.5.3 Simple and complex definiteness	279
8 Definiteness and noun phrase structure	282
8.1 The noun phrase as NP	282
8.1.1 The specifier position and definite Dets	283
8.1.2 Affixal articles	287
8.1.3 The definite constraint	288
8.2 The DP hypothesis	290
8.2.1 Movement processes in DP	291
8.2.2 Other functional categories in the noun phrase	294
8.2.3 Weaknesses in the DP analysis	296

8.3 A modified DP analysis	298
8.3.1 D as definiteness	298
8.3.2 The content of determiners	301
8.3.3 The analysis of personal pronouns	303
8.4 Configurationality and definiteness	305
8.5 Definiteness and person	310
8.5.1 Personal determiners and pronouns	310
8.5.2 Person and definite determiners	313
8.5.3 The nature of person-definiteness	318
8.6 Summary of proposals	320
9 Diachronic aspects	322
9.1 The emergence of functional structure	322
9.1.1 The development of DP	323
9.1.2 A definite article cycle	326
9.1.3 Indefinites and CardP	330
9.2 The origin of articles	331
9.2.1 Demonstrative to definite article	331
9.2.2 Articles in competition	334
9.2.3 Numeral to cardinal article	335
9.3 The longer perspective	336
9.3.1 Expansion in article use	336
9.3.2 The life cycle of definite articles	337
9.4 In conclusion	340
