

Table of contents

0	Introductory remarks	1
1	Touristic representations	3
1.1	Tourist ‘information’	3
1.2	Visual images	6
	Theoretical background	6
	Applying Barthes to “The Romance of Oxford”	13
	Further ways of reading the postcards	21
1.3	Background information: Oxford facts and figures	22
1.4	Visual images revisited: Adding to the theoretical context	25
1.5	Introducing a special attraction: “The Oxford Story”	30
2	‘Classic’ representations	35
2.1	A key classic and its continuing popularity	35
2.2	Oxford in contemporary popular culture	46
2.3	Theoretical background: Claude Lévi-Strauss, “The Structural Study of Myth”	54
2.4	A traditional detective novel as a case study	65
2.5	Naturalisation and depoliticisation in myth	74
2.6	The values transported by the Oxford classics	88
3	Dissenting and de-centring representations of Oxford	97
3.1	Oxford and ethnicity	98
	Migration and postcolonialism	98
	Oxford and the Empire (writing back)	101
	Some kinds of black: Oxford, identity, race, and ethnicity	118
	Identity	124
	Race, and old and new ethnicities	129
3.2	Theoretical background: Post-structuralism (and the endless deferral of the meaning of ‘Oxford’)	141
	Post-structuralism and the openness of the text	143
	City of many centres or city of no centre? Postcolonial Oxford and post-structuralism	148

3.3	Oxford: A class of its own?	158
	Class in Britain	161
	Entering and leaving Oxford: The secret of social success?	163
	Class: Economic, social, and cultural capital; or, Pierre Bourdieu at Oxford	168
	Putting class into Oxford mythology	177
3.4	Oxford and gender	185
	Women in Oxford: Some facts and figures	185
	Sex, gender, and sexuality: The theory	187
	Gendered representations of Oxford: A feminine or feminist rewriting	197
	Gendered representations of Oxford: A deconstructionist re-reading	201
	Queering Arnold	205
3.5	Mental maps of the city	207
	Maps of Oxford	212
	Oxford's cultural geographies: Revisiting the cities of Waugh, Adebayo, and Chaudhuri	216
	Whose Oxford? Two approaches to developing the city	218
4	Self-(re)presentations of the contemporary university world	225
4.1	Encoding and decoding Oxford mythology	225
4.2	Facts and figures about Oxford students in the 21st century	246
4.3	Official self-presentations of the University of Oxford	254
4.4	Alternative presentations of the university and its colleges by Oxford students	279
4.5	The construction and representation of a group identity	292
5	Concluding remarks	301
6	Suggestions for further study	305
	Index of key terms, texts, and thinkers	309
	Acknowledgements	311