Contents

Foreword 7

Introduction 9

I Fielding's Novels, "a New Province in Writing" 11

1. Fielding's Artistic Conduct of Plot and Characters 13
2. Fielding and the Tradition of the Picaresque Novel 14
3. Fielding's new Type of Realism 16
4. Fielding's Characters 18
5. The Structure of Fielding's Novels 20
6. Motivation in Fielding's Novels 23
7. Fielding's Attitude towards his Characters and his Readers 24
8. Other Elements in Fielding's Novels 26

II Between Fielding and Goethe 27

1. Fielding and his First German Followers 29
2. Wieland, Novelist and Imitator 30
3. Fielding and Wieland as Successors to the Picaresque Novelists 34
4. Fielding, Wieland and the Concept of Intellectual Realism 38
5. Wieland's Characters and their Resemblance to Fielding's 43
6. Wieland's Agathon as the First Modern Bildungsroman 50
7. Fielding's "Managed" Narrative and its Adaptation by Wieland 53
8. Motivation in Fielding's and Wieland's Novels 61
9. Fielding's and Wieland's Attitude to their Characters - and Readers 63
10. Wieland's Utilization of the Analytical Technique 67

III Goethe's Wilhelm Meister, an End and a Beginning 69

1. Goethe the Novelist and his Acquaintance with the Works of Fielding and Wieland 71
2. Goethe and the Picaresque Tradition 75
3. Goethe and the Concept of Intellectual Realism 84
4. Goethe's Characters, and their Kinship with Fielding's and Wieland's 87

5. Goethe and the Novel of Apprenticeship 91
6. Goethe and the Structure of the Novel 94
7. Goethe's Utilization of the Analytical Technique 104
8. Goethe's Attitude towards his Characters and Readers 105
9. Wilhelm Meister and Fielding's New Method of Motivation 107
10. Conclusion 113
Roswita Obermann: Die englischen Wurzeln des deutschen Bildungsromans. Nachwort 115
Leonhard M. Fiedler: Aufklärung und Exil – Guy Stern 119
Guy Stern – Schriften/Bibliography 125