Introduction to Part One: Descriptions of Copula Choice in Spanish

6

Chapter One: The Research Context

7

1. Introduction

7

2. The Distribution of Ser and Estar

7

3. Ser and Estar with Adjectives

10

3.1. General Description

10

3.2. Innovations in the Pre-Adjectival Context

12

3.3. Ser and Estar as Copulas

13

4. The Task for Second Language Acquisition Research

14

5. The Challenge of Changing Linguistic Norms

15

6. A Model of Analysis for Second Language Acquisition Data

15

7. Pedagogical Implications

16

8. Overview

16

9. Definitions of Essential Terms

17

Endnotes

18

Chapter Two: Theoretical Descriptions of Spanish Copula Contrast

19

1. Contributions from Linguistic Theory

19

2. Descriptive Accounts of the Copula Contrast

19

3. Lexico-Semantic Explanations

19

3.1. Explanations from Language Instruction

20

3.2. Explanations from Semantic Theory

21

3.3. Challenges for Lexical Dichotomies

22

4. Syntactic Explanations

23

4.1. Distribution

23

4.2. Perfectivity

25

4.3. From Perfectivity to Predicate Type

28

4.4. Features of the Copula of the Adjective?

30

4.5. The Relationship of Predicate Type to Syntax

31

4.6. Future Research on Predicate Type

33

5. Multi-feature Analyses

34

6. Classes of Adjectives

39

7. Implications for Second Language Acquisition

42

7.1. Potential Variables

42

7.2. The Interaction of Variables in a Multi-Feature Model

43

8. Concluding Remarks

43

Endnotes

43

Chapter Three: Language Change and Sociolinguistic Contributions to Theoretical Descriptions

44

1. Introduction

44

2. Historical Accounts of the Changing Status of Estar

44

2.1. The Developmental Paths of the Romance Languages

44

2.2. The Extension of Estar in Spanish	46
3. Sociolinguistic Accounts of the Changing Status of Estar	48
3.1. Bilingual Speech Communities	48
3.1.1. Internal and External Causes of Linguistic Change	51
3.2. Monolingual Speech Communities	55
4. Implications for the Second Language Acquisition of Copula Choice	58
4.1. The relationship of Language Change with Second Language Acquisition	58
4.2. Variables from Sociolinguistics	60
4.3. Methodological Insights	61
4.4. Challenges of Changing Norms	61
5. Concluding Remarks	61
Endnotes	62

Summary of Part One	63
Introduction to Part Two: The Second Language Acquisition of Copula Contrast	64
Chapter Four: Foundations for Research on the Second Language Acquisition of Copula Choice	65
1. Introduction	65
2. Early Research and its Link to Pedagogy	65
3. Transitional Stages of Development	67
3.1. Identification of the Stages of Acquisition of Copula Choice	67
3.2. The Study Abroad Context	71
3.3. Naturalistic Settings	74
3.4. Expansion of the Stages of Development	77
3.4.1. Additional Functions	77
3.4.2. Adjective Classes	79
4. Summary of Results and Implications for Future Research	84
4.1. The Role of Omission in the Acquisition of Copula Choice	85
4.2. The Acquisition of Locatives and Adjectives of Condition	86
4.3. The Role of Grammatical Accuracy	88
4.4. The Role of Theory	88
5. Concluding Remarks	89
Chapter Five: A New Model for the Analysis of Second Language Acquisition Data	90
1. Introduction	90
2. A Focus on the Copula + Adjective Structure	90
3. Cross-Disciplinary Insights	91
3.1. Contributions from Theoretical Linguistics	91
3.2. Contributions from Sociolinguistics	92
4. Features of a Multi-Variable Model of Analysis	93
4.1. How the Model Works	93
4.2. Changing Norms and Learner Accuracy	95
4.3. The Selection of Variables	96
5. Applying the Model: An Example from Beginning and Intermediate Learners	97
5.1. Participants	97

5.2. Elicitation Techniques	98
5.2.1. The Background Questionnaire	98
5.2.2. The Guided Interview Task	98
5.2.3. The Picture-Description Task	98
5.2.4. The Contextualized Preference Task	99
5.3. Procedures for Coding	99
5.4. Methods of Analysis	101
5.5. Results	102
5.5.1. Results of the $X^2$ Tests	102
5.5.2. Results of the Regression Analyses	102
5.6. Summary of Geeslin (1999, 2000)	105
6. Evaluation of the Model for the Analysis of Use	106
6.1. What Does the Model of Analysis Accomplish?	106
6.2. Evaluating the Variables in the Model	107
6.3. The Issue of Learner Accuracy	109
7. Concluding Remarks	110
Chapter Six: Incorporating Native Speaker Baselines and Advanced Students into the Model of Analysis	111
1. Introduction	111
2. Extension of the Multi-variable Model to Advanced Speakers	111
2.1. Participants	111
2.2. Elicitation Techniques	112
2.3. Procedures for Coding	112
2.4. Methods of Analysis	114
2.5. Results	115
2.5.1. Results of the $X^2$ Tests	115
2.5.2. Results of the Regression Analyses with Linguistic Variables	115
2.5.3. Results of the Regression Analyses with Linguistic and Individual Variables	116
2.6. Summary of findings	116
3. An Analysis of Native Speaker Use	117
3.1. Participants	117
3.2. Elicitation Techniques	117
3.3. Procedures for Coding	117
3.4. Methods of Analysis	118
3.5. Results	118
3.5.1. Results of the $X^2$ Tests	118
3.5.2. Results of the Regression Analyses with Linguistic Variables	119
3.5.3. Results of the Regression Analyses with Linguistic and Individual Variables	119
3.6. Summary of Findings	120
4. Comparing Native and Non-native Speakers	120
5. Evaluating the Model	121
6. Concluding Remarks	122

Introduction to Part Three: Conclusions, Implications and Future Research	124
Chapter Seven: Implications and New Directions	125
1. Introduction	125
2. A Summary of The Model of Analysis of Use	125
3. Pedagogical Implications	126
3.1. The Role of Input in Acquisition	126
3.2. Contexts for Acquisition of Constraints on Copula Choice	128
3.3. The Role of Instruction in Acquisition	129
4. Theoretical Implications	130
4.1. Insights for Theoretical Linguistics	130
4.2. Insights for Sociolinguistics	132
4.3. Insights for Second Language Acquisition	133
5. Conclusions and Directions for Future Research	134
5.1. The Role of Omission	134
5.2. Stages of Acquisition	135
5.3. Additional Learner Populations	136
5.4. Relating this Research to Other Studies of Variation in Second Language Acquisition	136
5.5. Other Approaches to Learner Accuracy	138
5.5. Beyond Copula Choice: Extending the Model of Analysis	138
6. Concluding Remarks	140
