1 General linguistics: the scope of the subject
1.1 General linguistics as the study of language	1
1.1.1 Languages and languages	1
1.1.2 Descriptive, historical, and comparative linguistics	4
1.1.3 The term 'philology'	6
1.2 Linguistics as a science	6
1.2.1 Implications of the term 'science'	6
1.2.2 Practical applications	10
1.3 The range of general linguistics	11
1.3.1 Levels of analysis	11
1.3.2 Language and communication	12
1.3.3 Phonetics, phonology, grammar, semantics	19
1.4 Semantics	21
1.4.1 Philosophical and linguistic interest in meaning	21
1.4.2 Word meaning	22
1.4.3 Sentence meaning	27
1.4.4 Extralinguistic context	28
1.4.5 Translation	31
General bibliography	34
Bibliography for Chapter 1	38
Notes to Chapter 1	40

2 Theoretical and methodological considerations

2.1	Abstractions	43
2.1.1	The status of linguistic abstractions	43
2.1.2	Structural linguistics: syntagmatic and paradigmatic relations	46
2.2	Dialect, idiolect, style	48
2.2.1	Dialects as subdivisions of languages	48
2.2.2	Dialect mapping: isoglosses	51
2.2.3	Class dialects and 'standard languages'	54
2.2.4	Criteria for determining dialect status	56
2.2.5	Linguistic tendencies affecting dialectal divisions	58
2.3	General and particular	60
2.4	The structural treatment of lexical meaning	64
2.4.1	Lexical interrelations	64
2.4.2	Collocation	64
2.4.3	Semantic field theory	67
	Bibliography for Chapter 2	71
	Notes to Chapter 2	72

3 Phonetics

3.1	Articulatory phonetics	77
3.1.1	The spoken foundation of language	77
3.1.2	Primacy of articulatory phonetics	78
3.1.3	The physiological basis of speaking	80
3.2	The organs of speech	82
3.2.1	The glottis	82
3.2.2	The supraglottal organs of speech	83
3.2.3	Nasalization	84
3.3	Segmentation: vowel and consonant	85
3.3.1	Segmentation	85
3.3.2	Vowels and consonants: transcription	85
3.3.3	Vowels	87
3.3.4	Consonants	93
3.4	Acoustic phonetics	98
3.5	Plurisegmental features	101
3.5.1	The continuum of articulation	101
3.5.2	Glottal and supraglottal features	102
3.5.3	Stress	103
3.5.4	Pitch	105
3.5.5	Voice quality	107
3.6	Phonetics in linguistics	110
	Bibliography for Chapter 3	111
	Notes to Chapter 3	112

4 Phonology
4.1 Speech and writing	114
4.2 Narrow and broad transcription: phonetics and phonology	118
4.3 The phoneme theory	121
4.3.1 The phonemic principle, phonemics	121
4.3.2 Segmental phonemes	122
4.3.3 Phonemic analysis of length and stress	126
4.3.4 The syllable	129
4.3.5 Tone phonemes	134
4.3.6 Intonation	136
4.3.7 Distinctive features	139
4.4 Further developments	144
4.4.1 Classical phoneme theory	144
4.4.2 Juncture phonemes	145
4.4.3 Prosodic phonology	149
4.4.4 Generative phonology	159
4.4.5 Natural generative phonology	162
4.4.6 Rule ordering	163
4.4.7 Autosegmental and metrical phonology	164
Bibliography for Chapter 4	167
Notes to Chapter 4	170
5 Grammar: grammatical elements
5.1 Preliminary questions	177
5.1.1 Uses of the term 'grammar'	177
5.1.2 Formal grammar	179
5.1.3 The basic units of grammar	181
5.2 The sentence	182
5.3 The word	184
5.3.1 Grammatical criteria of word status	184
5.3.2 Phonological markers of the word unit	188
5.3.3 Variant word forms	191
5.4 The morpheme	192
5.4.1 The morpheme as the minimal grammatical unit	192
5.4.2 Morpheme variants (allomorphs)	193
5.4.3 Bound and free morphemes: root and affix	196
5.5 The semantic status of morphemes	202
Bibliography for Chapters 5 and 6	203
Notes to Chapter 5	206

6 Grammar: grammatical classes, structures, and categories

6.1	Syntactic relations	208
6.2	Word classes	210
6.3	Immediate constituents	215
6.3.1	General principles: basic syntactic structures	215
6.3.2	Endocentric and exocentric: subordinate and coordinate	219
6.3.3	Word order and syntactic structure	224
6.3.4	Cross-cutting of immediate constituents and word boundaries	226
6.3.5	Comparison with traditional practice	227
6.4	Grammatical categories	227
6.4.1	Number, gender, case	227
6.4.2	Concord and government	231
6.4.3	Subject and object	235
6.4.4	Morphology in relation to syntax	237
6.4.5	Inflection and derivation	240
6.4.6	Grammatical functions of stress and pitch features	244
6.4.7	Morpheme and category	246
6.5	Subclasses, irregularities, and economy	247
6.6	Grammatical semantics	253
6.6.1	Semantic correlations	253
6.6.2	Meanings of grammatical categories	255
6.6.3	Class meanings and structural meanings	264
6.6.4	Methodological implications	267
	Notes to Chapter 6	268

7 Current linguistic theory

7.1	Theory formation	274
7.1.1	Linguistic theory and linguistic practice	274
7.1.2	Rival theories	277
7.2	Transformational-generative linguistics (TG)	280
7.2.1	General considerations	280
7.2.2	Early formulation: Syntactic structures	280
7.2.3	Later developments: Aspects of the theory of syntax and after	287
7.2.4	Government and binding	292
7.3	Other current theories	297
7.3.1	General context	297
7.3.2	Generalized phrase structure grammar (GPSG)	298

7.3.3	Relational and functional grammar	300
7.3.4	Dependency grammars	305
7.4	Earlier post-'structuralist' theories	307
7.4.1	General context	307
7.4.2	Tagmemics	308
7.4.3	M. A. K. Halliday: systemic grammar	311
7.4.4	Stratificational linguistics	318
7.5	Postscript	320
	Bibliography for Chapter 7	324
	Notes to Chapter 7	327
8	Linguistic comparison
8.1	Historically orientated comparison of languages (comparative and historical linguistics)	334
8.1.1	The material	334
8.1.2	The Great Vowel Shift in English	342
8.1.3	Semantic changes	343
8.1.4	The Indo-European family	345
8.1.5	Other language families	347
8.1.6	The representation of correspondences	350
8.1.7	The neogrammarian thesis	352
8.1.8	Loan words	354
8.1.9	Analogy	358
8.1.10	Sound change and generative grammar	360
8.1.11	Historical inferences	361
8.2	Typological comparison	367
8.2.1	General principles	367
8.2.2	Phonetic typology	369
8.2.3	Phonological typology	370
8.2.4	Grammatical typology	372
8.2.5	Linguistic typology and linguistic universals	373
8.2.6	Structural typology	376
8.2.7	Lexical typology	380
8.2.8	Historical change and linguistic typology	382
8.2.9	Summary	385
	Bibliography for Chapter 8	386
	Notes to Chapter 8	389
9	Wider perspectives
9.1	Linguistics, anthropology and sociology	396
9.1.1	Linguistics and anthropology	396
9.1.2	Linguistics and sociology: sociolinguistics	401
9.2	Linguistics and philosophy	404

9.3 Linguistics and psychology	408
9.4 Linguistics and language teaching: linguistics and communications engineering	412
9.4.1 Linguistics and language teaching	412
9.4.2 Linguistics and communications engineering	414
9.5 Linguistics and literature	416
9.6 Outline of the history of linguistic studies in Western Europe	423
Bibliography for Chapter 9	429
Notes to Chapter 9	432
