

Contents

Preface	xix
Acknowledgments	xxi
The principal symbols and conventions	xxii

Volume 1

Chapter 1 Beginning an account of linguistic meaning: speaker, hearer, context, and utterance (I)

1.1	Introduction	1
1.2	The properties ascribed to speaker S and hearer H	2
1.2.1	S and H as hypothetical men-in-the-street	2
1.2.2	The importance of being reasonable	3
1.2.3	Being co-operative is being polite (mostly)	10
1.2.3.1	Paying attention to H's 'face'	10
1.2.3.2	Attending to H's positive face	13
1.2.3.3	Attending to H's negative face	21
1.2.4	The co-operative principle	34
1.3	Context	36
1.3.1	The three categories of context	36
1.3.2	Setting	37
1.3.3	The world spoken of, W	41
1.3.4	Textual environment	44
1.3.5	Context – a summary	53
1.4	The utterance, U	55
1.4.1	Defining the utterance	55
1.4.2	Utterances and sentences, and other etic and emic categories	55
1.4.3	The prosody, Φ	58

1.5	The meaning of U is composed from the meaning of its constituents	61
1.5.1	The compositionality of meaning	61
1.5.2	Word, lexeme, and morpheme	62
1.5.3	The lexicon	64
1.5.4	Syntax and sentence meaning	66
1.6	Sentence meaning, denotation, and utterance meaning	67
1.6.1	Sense and denotation	67
1.6.2	More about the notion of sense	70
1.6.3	The meaning of S's speech act	72

Chapter 2 What is meaning? (75)

2.1	Introduction	75
2.2	Meaning as ostension	76
2.3	Meaning as use	77
2.4	Meaning as conditions on truth	79
2.5	Meaning as speaker's stimulus and hearer's response	82
2.6	Meaning as concepts: the ideational theory of meaning	86
2.7	Meaning as abstract objects: a Platonist conception of meaning	88
2.8	The naturalist hypothesis	91
2.9	Sense and the perceived characteristics of the denotatum	99
2.9.1	The relationship between the form of an expression, its sense, and its denotatum	99
2.9.2	The overgeneralization of very young children	103
2.9.3	Perceiving	103
2.9.4	What makes a cup a cup (rather than a mug?)	107
2.9.5	Prototypical denotata and fuzzy sets	109
2.9.6	The sense and denotation of basic colour terms	111
2.9.7	The semantics of noun classifiers	121
2.9.8	Number registration in English and the perceived characteristics of noun phrase denotata	124
2.9.9	The Aristotelian tradition in grammatical analysis	136
2.9.10	Summary of the evidence that sense reflects the perceived characteristics of the concrete denotatum	137
2.10	What meaning is, and the linking of sense and denotation	139

Chapter 3 Meaningful properties and meaning relations (140)

3.1	Introduction	140
3.2	The property of being meaningful or not	141
3.2.1	E is meaningful	141
3.2.2	Anomaly	141
3.2.3	Indeterminability	143
3.2.4	Contradiction	145
3.3	Expressions with more than one meaning	146
3.3.1	Ambiguity, polysemy, and homonymy	146
3.3.2	Polysemy	147
3.3.3	Homonymy	150
3.3.4	Definitions for polysemy and homonymy	155
3.4	Values	156
3.4.1	Introduction	156
3.4.2	The notion of truth in language	158
3.4.3	Predictions and probable-truth values	161
3.4.4	The genuineness of a commissive	162
3.4.5	Compliance values	162
3.4.6	The appropriacy value of an acknowledgment	163
3.4.7	Authority values	163
3.4.8	Values – a summary	164
3.5	Semantic predicates as meaning components	164
3.5.1	Introduction	164
3.5.2	Componential analysis	165
3.5.3	Semantic components as semantic predicates	171
3.6	Synonymy, or semantic identity between propositions	174
3.6.1	Synonymy as symmetrical semantic implications between propositions	174
3.6.2	Synonymy between clauses containing symmetric predicates	177
3.6.3	Converse predicates	177
3.6.4	Cross-varietal synonymies	178
3.7	Asymmetric semantic implication and the relation of hyponymy	179
3.8	Antonymy and hyponymy	181
3.9	Semantic implication, conversational implicature, and conventional implicature	183
3.10	Tautology	188
3.11	Semantic overlap and semantic difference between propositional constituents	191

3.11.1	Introduction	191
3.11.2	Osgood's semantic differential: a measurement of connotative meaning	194
3.12	Meaning change	203
3.12.1	Introduction	203
3.12.2	Meaning change as a consequence of a change in the nature or conception of the phenomenon denoted by a lexicon item	204
3.12.3	Extension in the denotational scope of a lexeme	205
3.12.4	Narrowing in the denotational scope of a lexeme	207
3.12.5	Meaning change as the result of a connotation	209
3.12.6	Meaning transfer – the shift of a label from one phenomenon to another contextually associated one	209
3.12.7	Meaning change – a summary	210
3.13	Meaningful properties and meaning relations – a summary	211

Chapter 4 Lexicon semantics (214)

4.1	Introduction	214
4.2	The meanings of words that consist of a lexeme and inflexional morphemes	215
4.3	Are derived lexemes lexicon items?	216
4.3.1	Lexical derivation	216
4.3.2	Zero derivation	217
4.3.3	Lexemes derived by prefixing and suffixing derivational morphemes	223
4.3.4	Lexicon items	225
4.4	Compounds	225
4.5	Phrasal verbs	233
4.6	Idioms	236
4.7	Other ways of word coining using the existing lexicon	239
4.7.1	Introduction	239
4.7.2	Clipping	239
4.7.3	Hypocorisms	240
4.7.4	Blends	240
4.7.5	Acronyms and abbreviations	241
4.7.6	The extension of proper names	242
4.7.7	In conclusion	243
4.8	Borrowed words	244
4.9	The effects of sound on word coining	245
4.9.1	Folk etymology	245

4.9.2	Onomatopoeia	247
4.9.3	Phonesthesia	248
4.9.4	Reduplication	250
4.9.5	Rhyming slang	251
4.9.6	Summing up the effects of sound on word formation	252
4.10	The composition of scientific names	252
4.11	The set of lexicon items	254
4.12	Form and presentation in the theoretical dictionary	256
4.12.1	The ordering of items in the lexicon, and the ordering of information in a lexicon entry	256
4.12.2	Formal presentation	257
4.12.3	Syntactic information in the lexicon entry	262
4.12.4	Use of the lexicon in the interpretation of new coinings	264
4.12.5	The metalanguage for semantic definitions	265
4.12.6	Semantic information in the lexicon entry	270
4.12.7	Conclusions about form and presentation in the lexicon	273

Chapter 5 The semantic interpretation of sentences: a study of Katz's semantic theory and post-Katzian semantics (274)

5.1	Introduction	274
5.2	Katzian semantics	274
5.2.1	The importance of Katz's contribution to linguistic semantics	275
5.2.2	'The structure of a semantic theory' (1963)	277
5.2.3	The semantic interpretation of underlying phrase markers	288
5.2.4	Problems with selection restrictions	293
5.2.4.1	The problem of lexical insertion in a standard theory grammar	295
5.2.4.2	Problems with semantic selection restrictions	303
5.2.4.3	Summary remarks on selection restrictions	305
5.2.5	Katz's metalanguage: semantic representations in the lexicon	306
5.2.5.1	Semantic markers and distinguishers	306
5.2.5.2	Semantic markers as concepts and as abstract objects	315
5.2.5.3	The form and structure of semantic markers	316
5.2.5.4	Katz's metalanguage and the semantics of time, tense, and aspect	327
5.2.5.5	Interpreting Katz's lexicon entry for the transitive verb open	336

5.2.6	The projection rule	342
5.2.7	On relating the surface structure with its meaning in Katzian semantics	351
5.2.8	A final assessment of Katz's theory as a theory of Σ 's meaning	351
5.3	Some alternatives to Katzian semantics	353
5.3.1	Introduction	353
5.3.2	Weinreich on semantics	355
5.3.3	Generative semantics	363
5.3.3.1	The notion of hypothetical verbs from Lakoff 1965/1970	365
5.3.3.2	Jeffrey Gruber's Studies in Lexical Relations 1965/1970/1976	371
5.3.3.3	James D. McCawley rejects the distinction between syntax and semantics	373
5.3.3.4	An evaluation of generative semantics as a theory of sentence meaning	377
5.3.4	Schemes for marking participant roles in a grammar	383
5.3.5	Last words on the alternatives to Katzian semantics	385
5.4	Inferential semantics and the relationship between the meaning of a sentence and the meanings of the lexicon items it contains	386
	Notes to Volume 1	392
	References	414
	Index to Volumes 1 and 2	437

Volume 2

Chapter 6 Prosody and meaning (1)

6.1	Introduction	1
6.2	The auditory analysis-by-synthesis of prosodic categories	2
6.3	Stress (in English)	7
6.3.1	What stress is	7
6.3.2	The notion of normal stress placement and the function of stress	8
6.4	The meaning and function of disjunctures	25
6.4.1	Disjuncture in the delivery of planned texts and disjuncture in spontaneous speech	25
6.4.2	The functions of disjuncture in the delivery of planned texts	26
6.4.3	Disjuncture in spontaneous speech	30

6.5	Intonation	34
6.5.1	Introduction	34
6.5.2	The use of keys and tones in the intonation of English	36
6.5.3	The high rise terminal in Australian English declaratives	48
6.6	Concluding remarks on the meaning of prosody (in English)	56

Chapter 7 Informational aspects of the utterance (59)

7.1	Introduction	59
7.2	Focus	60
7.3	Scope relations	71
7.4	Light-heavy alternation as a cognitive processing strategy	81
7.5	FC: the first constituent in a clause or utterance	82
7.6	EC: the end constituent in a clause or utterance	96
7.7	Sentence subjects, left conjuncts, and the familiarity and personal hierarchies	102
7.8	Constituent order and NP roles	107
7.9	Topics	110
7.10	Constituent order and temporal relations	119
7.11	Definiticity, generic NPs, and referentiality	119
7.11.1	Definiticity in English NPs	119
7.11.2	Generic NPs (in English)	134
7.11.3	Referentiality	142
7.11.4	Concluding word on definiticity, genericness, and referentiality	160
7.12	Summary discussion on informational aspects of the utterance	160

Chapter 8 Speech Acts (164)

8.1	What is a speech act?	164
8.2	The superficial form of explicit performatives	167
8.2.1	Performative verbs	167
8.2.2	The person(s) responsible for the illocution	168
8.2.3	The use of hereby with explicit performatives	169
8.2.4	Tense and aspect in the performative clause	169
8.2.5	Negative performatives	170
8.2.6	Modal auxiliaries with performatives	172
8.2.7	Performatives in the emphatic indicative and other moods	173

8.2.8	Necessary and sufficient conditions on the form of explicit performatives	174
8.3	Illocutions, perlocutions, utterance acts, locutions, and propositions	175
8.3.1	Illocution	175
8.3.2	Perlocutions	176
8.3.3	Utterance acts	177
8.3.4	Locutionary acts and denotational acts	178
8.3.5	A schema for analysing the meaning of a speech act	181
8.4	Austin's felicity conditions on illocutionary acts	181
8.5	Towards a classification of speech acts	190
8.5.1	Criteria for classification	190
8.5.2	Interpersonal illocutionary acts	192
8.5.2.1	The definitional components of interpersonal illocutionary acts	192
8.5.2.2	Definitions of constatives	193
8.5.2.3	Definitions of predictives	194
8.5.2.4	Definitions of commissives	195
8.5.2.5	Definitions of acknowledgments	197
8.5.2.6	Definitions of directives	199
8.5.2.7	Definitions of interpersonal authoritatives	199
8.5.3	Declaratory illocutionary acts	200
8.5.3.1	The defining characteristics of declaratory acts	200
8.5.3.2	The definition of effectives	201
8.5.3.3	The definition of verdictives	202
8.5.4	Summary remarks on the taxonomy and definitions of illocutionary acts	203
8.6	Indirect illocutions	204
8.6.1	Preliminary remarks on indirect illocution	204
8.6.2	Sentence types and illocutionary force	205
8.6.2.1	Introduction	205
8.6.2.2	The primary illocution of interrogative sentences	207
8.6.2.3	The illocutions of imperative sentences	224
8.6.2.4	Why explicit performatives describe indirect illocutions	228
8.6.3	Summary remarks on primary and indirect illocution	237
8.7	The illocutions of utterances containing more than one clause	239
8.8	Co-operative clauses	242
8.9	When there is more than one hearer	246
8.10	A comparison of the inferential theory of speech acts with two other theories	250
8.10.1	Introduction	250

8.10.2	The inferential theory of speech acts	250
8.10.3	The performative analysis theory of speech acts	252
8.10.4	Katz's theory of propositional type	266
8.10.5	Concluding remarks on the comparison of the three theories of speech acts	280

Chapter 9 Epilogue: on linguistic meaning (281)

Notes to Volume 2	299
References	311
Index to Volumes 1 and 2	333

Figures and Tables

Figures

Volume 1

1.1	The syntactic structure of the word undesirables	67
2.1	Relationships between form, sense and denotatum, based on the work of two early 14th century grammarians	101
2.2	An ambiguous figure	106
2.3	Pictures of containers used in some of the experiments reported in Labov 1978	108
2.4	Colour sphere from Kay & McDaniel 1978	116
2.5	The evolution of basic colour terms	118
3.1	Three dimensional model constructed from distance measurements in Table 3.2	197
3.2	The effect of pressure in the system on the narrowing of the meaning of girl	208
5.1	The procedure for assigning semantic interpretations to sentences in Katz & Fodor 1963	283
5.2	A summary sketch of the reasons for semantically interpreting deep structures	291
5.3	The semantic interpretation of a sentence in Katz's semantic theory	294
5.4	The revised entry for bachelor from Katz & Fodor 1963	311
5.5	The dictionary entry for bachelor from Bolinger 1965	314
5.6	The lexicon entry for bachelor from Katz & Postal 1964	319
5.7	Katz & Postal's lexicon entry for bachelor with the semantic markers replaced by arbitrary proper names	319
5.8	The semantic reading for chase from Katz and Nagel 1974	322
5.9	Semantic reading for chase in Katz 1977a	322
5.10	The lexicon entry for the transitive verb open , Katz 1972	332
5.11	The lexicon entry for open from Jackendoff 1972	340

5.9	Semantic reading for chase in Katz 1977a	343
5.12	A lexically specified underlying phrase marker	347
5.13	A semantically interpreted underlying phrase marker	349
5.14	Correlating meaning and form in Katz's semantic theory	350

Volume 2

6.1	The general form of intonation contours used by Hadding-Koch & Studdert-Kennedy 1964	6
7.1	From Beaugrande 1980:91	111
7.2	From Beaugrande 1980:93	111
7.3	From Beaugrande 1980:98	115
8.1	The classification of primary illocutionary acts	238
8.2	The classification of indirect illocutionary acts	238
8.3	The properties of the highest clause in the deep structure of every sentence, according to the performative analysis theory of speech acts	253
8.4	The highest performative clause in the deepest structure according to G. Lakoff 1972	265
8.5	The performative branch condition	272
8.6	The right branch for advisive propositions	275
8.7	The right branch for obligative propositions	276
8.8	The performative reading for promising, after Katz 1977a	277

Tables

Volume 1

3.1	Responses from one subject	196
3.2	Matrix showing semantic distances	197