

Contents

VOLUME 1 THEORY AND DESCRIPTION

Foreword	ix
Introduction	1
M. A. K. Halliday and Robin P. Fawcett
0.1 The problem of how to make progress in linguistics— and keep your friends	1
0.2 The other 'new developments'	5
0.3 Conclusions	9
Part I Theory
1 The meaning of features in systemic linguistics	14
James R. Martin
1.1 Systemic linguistics as an item and paradigm model	14
1.2 The formal meaning of features	16
1.3 The formal meaning of features and relational network linguistics	26
1.4 The non-formal meaning of features	30
1.5 Socio-semantic networks	34
1.6 Speech functions and mood	35
1.7 Conclusions	37
Part II Discourse
2 Is teacher an unanalysed concept?	41
Margaret Berry
2.1 Introduction	41
2.2 Some facts about classroom discourse	42
2.3 The need for an explanation	43
2.4 The type of explanation that could be offered	44
2.5 Some facts about doctor-patient interviews and committee talk	46
2.6 Some hypotheses that could account for the facts	48
2.7 A further set of hypotheses	50

2.8	Future work to test the hypotheses	53
2.9	Conclusion	61
3	Sociosemantic networks and discourse structure Geoffrey J. Turner	64
3.1	Introduction	64
3.2	The question of 'semantic structures'	64
3.3	Complementary emphases?	66
3.4	Discourse: layers of structure	67
3.5	Speech functions and discourse functions	69
3.6	Berry's proposals	78
3.7	Locating the Birmingham work and the sociosemantic work	88
3.8	Conclusion	90
Part III Meta-functions
4	Meta-functions: aspects of their development, status and use in systemic linguistics Michael Gregory	94
4.1	The development of the concept of meta-functions	94
4.2	Two positions on meta-functions: M. A. K. Halliday and R. P. Fawcett	97
4.3	J. R. Martin's proposed approach to register and meta-functions	100
5	The logical and textual functions Jeffrey Ellis	107
5.0	Introduction	107
5.1	The logical function	107
5.2	The textual function	114
5.3	Relations between the two functions	122
Part IV System networks in the lexico-grammar
6	The semantics of clause and verb for relational processes in English Robin P. Fawcett	130
6.1	Basic problems	130
6.2	Some primary choices in the relational process network	136
6.3	Further primary choices	143
6.4	From elegance to usability: some more delicate choices	162
6.5	Summary and conclusions	174
7	The grammarian's dream: lexis as most delicate grammar Ruqaiya Hasan	184
7.1	The lexico-grammatical stratum	184

7.2	The lexico-grammar of acquisition: gather, collect, accumulate	187
7.3	The lexico-grammar of deprivation 1: scatter, divide, distribute	197
7.4	The lexico-grammar of deprivation 2: strew, spill, share	202
7.5	The continuity of grammar and lexis	206
8	Communicative function and semantics Christopher S. Butler	212
8.1	Aims and scope	212
8.2	Three approaches to indirect speech acts	212
8.3	Communicative function as semantic	213
8.4	The middle path	217
8.5	The 'surface meaning' approach	220
8.6	Beyond the semantics	222
8.7	Conclusion	226
9	Continuative and inceptive adjuncts in English David J. Young	230
9.0	Introduction	230
9.1	The meaning of the items	231
9.2	Suppletion: negative and interrogative clauses	232
9.3	Aspect	239
9.4	Conjunctive adjuncts	243
Part V The daughter dependency grammar version of the theory
10	Daughter dependency theory and systemic grammar R. A. Hudson	246
10.1	Similarities between DDT and systemic grammar	246
10.2	The role of features	247
10.3	Sister dependencies	249
10.4	Function labels	253
10.5	System networks and classification rules	255
11	Voice neutrality and functional roles in the English clause: a contribution to daughter-dependency grammar J. Taglicht	258
11.0	Introduction	258
11.1	Functional roles in daughter dependency grammar	258
11.2	Voice neutrality in English	259
11.3	The feature [-personal] as a key to voice neutrality	260
11.4	Raising and voice neutrality	264
11.5	The functions of raised elements in the matrix clause	265
11.6	Conclusion	267
	Appendix	269

Part VI Phonology

12 Aspects of word phonology	272
V. Prakasam
12.0 Introduction	272
12.1 Phonetic features	272
12.2 The basic component	273
12.3 Efficacy of the functionalist approach	277
12.4 Lexical registration	282
12.5 Morphological function of 'sounds'	284
12.6 Summary	285
Index to Volume 1	289