

Contents

Preface	ix
1. Introduction	1
2. Physiologic, Acoustic, and Perceptual Criteria	5
2.1 The Speech Production Apparatus	5
2.2 Anatomy of the Larynx	8
2.3 Some Observations of Laryngeal Activity	10
2.4 The Myoelastic-Aerodynamic Theory of Phonation	14
2.5 Phonation in the Chest Register	18
2.6 The Falsetto Register and Mechanisms for Intensity Change	20
2.7 Summation — Laryngeal Activity	22
2.8 The Subglottal System and Respiration	23
2.9 The Breath-Group	26
2.10 The Effects of the Supraglottal Respiratory System and Perception	29
2.11 Secondary Effects	32
3. Intonation in Infant Speech	38
3.1 Some Observations of Adult Intonation	38
3.2 The Acquisition of Language by Children	39

3.3	Infant Cries	41
3.4	A Hypothetical Innate Referential Breath-Group		42
3.5	The Use of Intonation as a Meaningful Signal by Infants	44
4.	Perceptual, Physiologic, and Acoustic Data		48
4.1	Perceptual Data for Swedish and American English	48
4.2	Physiologic and Acoustic Data for American English	61
4.3	Discussion of Data	91
4.4	Summary and Discussion of Hypotheses and Observations	103
5.	The "Phonemic Phrase"		108
5.1	The Division of a Sentence into Breath-Groups	108
5.2	Suprasegmental Phonologic Features and the Syntactic Component	120
5.3	Emotion	121
5.4	Taxonomic Analyses of Intonation and the "Phonemic Phrase"	123
5.5	On the Independence of Pitch and Stress Levels		128
6.	The Marked Breath-Group and Questions		129
6.1	The Formation of Questions in a Number of Languages	130
6.2	English Question Formation: Diachronic and Synchronic Aspects	133
7.	Prominence, Stress, and Emphasis in American English		144
7.1	Definitions of Prominence, Stress, and Emphasis	144
7.2	Some Phonetic Manifestations of Stress		147
7.3	Categorization versus Discrimination		159
8.	On the Perception and the Production of Speech		162

9.	A Survey of Some Recent Linguistic Studies of Intonation	171
9.1	Henry Sweet (1892), New English Grammar	172
9.2	Daniel Jones (1909), Intonation Curves	173
9.3	H. E. Palmer and W. G. Blandford (1924), A Grammar of Spoken English on a Strictly Phonetic Basis	174
9.4	L. E. Armstrong and I. C. Ward (1926), Handbook of English Intonation	175
9.5	Daniel Jones (1932), An Outline of English Phonetics	178
9.6	L. Bloomfield (1933), Language	180
9.7	B. Bloch and G. L. Trager (1942), Outline of Linguistic Analysis	182
9.8	R. S. Wells (1945), "The Pitch Phonemes of English"	182
9.9	K. L. Pike (1945), The Intonation of American English	183
9.10	R. S. Wells (1947), "Immediate Constituents"	187
9.11	G. L. Trager and H. L. Smith (1951), Outline of English Structure	188
9.12	Z. Harris (1944), "Simultaneous Components in Phonology"	191
9.13	R. H. Stetson (1951), Motor Phonetics: A Study of Speech Movements in Action	191
9.14	M. Bierwisch (1965), "Regeln für die Intonation deutscher Sätze"	194
	References	197
	Index	207