

Contents

1.	Introduction	1
1.	Syntactic focus theory and the phenomenon of secondary predication	1
2.	Roadmap	15
2.	Syntactic representation of secondary predications	17
1.	The small clause analysis	18
1.1.	The theoretical program	18
1.2.	Stowell's dilemma: problems with the un governed status of PRO	22
1.3.	Alternative small clause proposals	27
1.3.1.	Chomsky's (1981) proposal	27
1.3.2.	Chomsky's (1986a) proposal	31
1.3.3.	Hornstein & Lightfoot's (1987) proposal	34
1.4.	Hoekstra's (1988) generalization of the small clause analysis to resultatives	40
1.5.	Conclusion	49
2.	The predication theory analysis	50
2.1.	Williams (1980): the theory of predication	50
2.2.	Williams' (1983) arguments against small clauses	52
2.3.	Conclusion	56
3.	Distributional syntax of secondary predications	58
3.1.	Rothstein's (1985) elaboration of the predication theory	58
3.2.	Culicover & Wilkins (1984, 1986): VP-internal representation of depictives	65
3.3.	McNulty (1988): modifications of Rothstein's analysis	68
3.4.	Roberts (1988): the subject in VP hypothesis	70
4.	Defending a complex predicate analysis	74
4.1.	Larson's (1988) complex predicate analysis	74
4.2.	Modification of Larson's proposal	78
4.3.	Theta-theoretical considerations	85
5.	Conclusion	90
3.	Focus structure in a principle-based theory of grammar	93
1.	Introduction	93
2.	Focus as a syntactic feature: a historical development	94

2.1.	The syntactic approach	96
2.1.1.	Chomsky & Halle (1968)	96
2.1.2.	Bresnan's (1971, 1972) revision of the nuclear stress rule	98
2.1.3.	Lieberman (1975) and Lieberman & Prince (1977): a phonological account of the nuclear stress rule	103
2.2.	The semantic-pragmatic approach	107
2.2.1.	Bolinger (1972)	107
2.2.2.	Schmerling (1976)	109
2.3.	Focus as new information	113
2.3.1.	Halliday (1967b)	113
2.3.2.	Chomsky (1972)	115
2.4.	The focus structure approach	118
2.4.1.	Jackendoff (1972)	118
2.4.2.	Ladd (1980)	121
2.5.	Conclusion	123
3.	The modularity of intonational models and the theory of focus	125
3.1.	Culicover & Rochemont (1983): a modular NSR-based account	125
3.2.	Gussenhoven (1983): focus domain formation replacing the NSR	140
3.3.	Selkirk (1984): a pitch-accent-first model	146
3.4.	Rochemont (1986): an elaborated pitch-accent-first model	163
3.5.	The concept of argument structure in Selkirk's and Rochemont's focus theories	173
3.6.	Excursion: Cinque's (1993) revival of the syntactic approach	179
4.	Conclusion	191
4.	Focus theory and theta-saturation theory as methods of licensing	193
1.	Introduction	193
2.	The intonational model	195
3.	The motivation of the intonational model	202
3.1.	WH-questions are not an exception to the DFA	202
3.2.	Focus assignment at D-structure	212
3.2.1.	Focus assignment and WH-movement	212
3.2.2.	Focus assignment and NP movement	213
3.3.	Focus assignment and adjuncts	220

3.4.	Licensing, focus, and the argument-adjunct asymmetry in a derivational approach	223
4.	A generalization of the focus licensing principles	237
4.1.	Introduction	237
4.2.	The licensing theory of theta-saturation and argument structure	238
4.3.	Focus licensing principles revisited	251
4.3.1.	Introduction	251
4.3.2.	Thetic and categorical utterances	253
4.3.3.	Diesing's (1992) proposal	258
4.3.4.	Drubig's (1992a) proposal	262
4.3.5.	An alternative account of focus projection facts	266
5.	Conclusion	274
5.	Pitch extraction analysis of secondary predications: experimental data	277
1.	Introduction and experimental design	277
2.	Pitch extraction analysis of resultatives and depictives	282
2.1.	Transitive AP resultatives	282
2.2.	Intransitive resultatives	288
2.3.	German V _{end} resultatives	290
2.4.	Object-oriented depictives	291
2.5.	German V _{end} depictives	292
2.6.	Focus on the secondary predicate	293
2.7.	Conclusions on the production experiment	294
3.	Prosodic disambiguation of secondary predications	299
3.1.	Prosodic disambiguation of resultatives vs. depictives	299
3.2.	Prosodic disambiguation of directional and locative PPs	304
3.3.	Perception test	306
4.	Evaluation of experiments and summary	309
5.	Pitch extraction contours of related finite and noninflectional constructions	311
5.1.	Thetic finite constructions	311
5.2.	Thetic noninflectional constructions	315
5.3.	Categorical finite constructions	323
5.4.	Categorical noninflectional constructions	325
5.5.	Summary	331
6.	Conclusion	332

6.	Syntactic licensing and focus projection in secondary predications	333
1.	Introduction	333
2.	Syntactic licensing of resultatives	334
2.1.	Event structure of resultatives	334
2.2.	Incorporation of resultative event composition into Higginbotham's phrase structure theory	344
2.3.	Particle and three-place predicate constructions	352
2.4.	Conclusion	354
3.	Syntactic licensing of depictives	355
3.1.	Arguments against the licensing of depictives at D-structure	356
3.2.	Subject-predicate and predicate-predicate-linking	366
3.3.	Explanation of the differences between RSPs and DSPs	372
3.4.	Conclusion	380
4.	Focus projection in secondary predications	380
4.1.	Introduction	380
4.2.	Focus projection in RSPs	382
4.3.	Focus projection in DSPs	388
4.4.	Licensing and the focus-projective behavior of related constructions	405
5.	Conclusion	411
7.	Conclusion	413
	Notes	419
	References	435
	Records	465
	Index	471