Preface	v
Introduction	vii
1 Some traditional and modern treatments of pronouns and anaphora	1
1.0 Summary	1
1.1 Two classical accounts of pronouns	2
1.1.0 The rediscovery of anaphora	2
1.1.1 Dionysius Thrax's syntactic account	3
1.1.2 Apollonius Dyskolus's account of pronominal reference	4
1.2 Bühler's theory of anaphora	9
1.3 Pronouns as substitutes	12
1.3.0 Bloomfield's substitutional account	12
1.3.1 Transformational explication of the substitutional account	16
1.4 Constraints on the interpretation of pronouns	20
1.4.0 The precede-command constraint	20
1.4.1 Difficulties for the transformational approach to pronouns	23
1.4.2 The constituent-command constraint	26
1.5 Non-structural approaches to pronominal reference	29
2 Modes of pronominal reference	32
2.0 Summary	32
2.1 How do pronouns refer?	33
2.1.0 Absolute v. relative control of pronouns	33
2.1.1 Towards an explication of the distinction between absolute and relative control	37
2.2 Two models of pronoun interpretation	40
2.2.0 The two models: syntactic and referential pronoun uses	40
2.2.1 Referentiality and context dependence of quantifier expressions	43

2.2.2	Criteria for syntactic and referential pronoun uses	47
2.2.3	Exclusively non-referentially used pronoun forms in English	50
2.3	Two types of referential pronoun occurrences	55
2.3.0	Anaphora and deixis	55
2.3.1	Anaphorically used pronouns and the aboutness-relation	56
2.3.2	Deictically used pronouns and focus	58
2.3.3	Distinguishing anaphoric from deictic occurrences	59
3	Referentiality and context dependence	64
3.0	Summary	64
3.1	The link between referentiality and context dependence	64
3.2	Context models and the interpretation of utterances	65
3.2.0	What are context models?	65
3.2.1	How utterances change context models	68
3.2.2	The structure of context models	71
3.2.3	Stereotypical information in context models	74
3.3	What is context dependence?	78
3.3.0	Past treatment of the question	78
3.3.1	Context dependent interpretation of predicates	80
3.3.2	Context dependence and context models	83
3.3.3	Function–argument structures	93
3.3.4	Distinguishing referentially from syntactically occurring expressions	101
4	Historical and comparative aspects of the classification of pronoun uses	105
4.0	Summary	105
4.1	The classification of pronoun uses as a universal classification	105
4.2	Formal distinctions between SPs, APs, and DPs in various languages	106
4.3	The pronoun classification in historical perspective	113
4.4	Origins of syntactic agreement pronouns	117
4.5	Syntactic agreement pronouns as morphemes of verb-inflection	120
5	Problems about specific pronoun occurrences	123
5.0	Summary	123
5.1	Evans's classification of pronoun occurrences	123
5.2	Referential pronouns with inferred referents	128
5.2.0	E-type pronouns	128
5.2.1	E-types and donkeys	130

5.2.2	Examination sentences	133
5.2.3	Inferred referents	134
5.2.4	A proposal for a unified treatment	137
5.3	Paycheque sentences	141
5.4	Bach–Peters sentences	146
5.5	Noun phrase anaphors	147
5.6	Pure anaphora	151
6	Constraints on the interpretation of syntactic and anaphoric pronouns	158
6.0	Summary	158
6.1	The syntactic agreement constraint	159
6.2	The scope of the general c–command constraint	163
6.2.0	A syntactic constraint on the interpretation of referential pronouns?	163
6.2.1	Counterexamples to the general c–command constraint	165
6.2.2	Is the constraint a syntactic one?	173
6.3	The anaphora constraint	174
6.3.0	The constraint formulated	174
6.3.1	A justification for the anaphora constraint	177
6.4	Syntactic agreement pronouns	187
6.4.0	The domains of anaphora and syntactic agreement	187
6.4.1	What is syntactic pronoun agreement?	189
7	Beyond structural constraints	201
7.0	Summary	201
7.1	A principle governing anaphora	201
7.1.0	A simple and common picture of anaphora	201
7.1.1	An equally simple but more correct picture of anaphora	203
7.2	The Aboutness Principle of Anaphora	206
7.2.0	The Aboutness Principle formulated	206
7.2.1	The Aboutness Principle applied	207
7.3	A partial reconstruction of the Aboutness Principle in procedural terms	211
