Part One: A Cross-linguistic Typology of Comparatives

1	Introduction
1.1	General background	2
1.2	Stages in a universalist research project	3
1.3	Issues in universalist methodology	10
1.4	Outline of the following chapters	22
2	The Typology of Comparative Constructions
2.1	The definition of the concept 'comparative construction'	24
2.2	Parameters in the typology of comparatives	28
2.3	Five major types of comparative constructions	39
2.4	Particle Comparatives	45
2.5	Mixed cases	47
3	In Search of a Determinant Factor
3.1	Word order as a possible determinant	53
3.2	Spatial relations as a possible determinant	56
3.3	Temporal chaining as the determinant of comparative types	58
3.4	Preliminary data	59
4	Types of Syntactic Chaining
4.1	Introduction	66
4.2	The definition of the notion 'consecutive chain'	70
4.3	The formal expression of consecutive chaining	75
4.4	Aspects of consecutive deranking	83
4.5	The formal expression of simultaneous chaining	94
4.6	Summary: syntactic types in temporal chaining	98
4.7	Language types in temporal chaining	98

5	Comparative Type and Chaining Type
5.1	Introduction	104
5.2	The set of chaining-based universals	106
5.3	Further remarks on the universals	108
Part Two: Testing the Set of Chaining-based Universals
6	The Separative Comparative
6.1	Introduction	114
6.2	Direct corroboration from SOV-languages	115
6.3	Indirect corroboration from SOV-languages	123
6.4	Corroboration from non-SOV-languages	129
6.5	Counterexamples	132
6.6	Conclusion	135
7	The Allative and the Locative Comparative
7.1	Introduction	136
7.2	The Allative Comparative	136
7.3	The Locative Comparative	146
7.4	Indeterminate cases	152
7.5	Conclusion	157
8	The Exceed Comparative
8.1	Introduction	159
8.2	The Exceed-1 Comparative: serialization	160
8.3	Other types of the Exceed Comparative	166
8.4	Factors in the surface variation of the Exceed Comparative	178
8.5	Conclusion	182
9	Derived-case Comparatives
9.1	Introduction	183
9.2	The Conjoined Comparative	183
9.3	Particle Comparatives	188
9.4	The comparative construction in Dutch and English	198
9.5	Conclusion	221
10	An Examination of Secondary Choices
10.1	Introduction	223
10.2	Secondary derived-case comparatives	223
10.3	Secondary Exceed Comparatives	228
10.4	Secondary Locative and Allative Comparatives	235
10.5	Secondary Separative Comparatives	243
10.6	Conclusion	251

Part Three: Towards an Explanation of Comparative-type Choice

11	Theoretical Background Assumptions
11.1	Introduction	254
11.2	Three levels of linguistic structure	257
11.3	Further remarks on cognitive structure	259
11.4	Structural levels for comparative constructions	261
11.5	Conclusion	266
12	Cognitive Strategies in Comparative Formation
12.1	Introduction	267
12.2	Basic features of cognitive strategies	267
12.3	Three cognitive strategies	271
12.4	Conclusion	276
13	Grammatical Procedures in Comparative Formation
13.1	Introduction	277
13.2	Functional aspects of grammatical procedures	277
13.3	Deranking and identity deletion	278
13.4	Options in identity deletion	282
13.5	Conclusion	289
14	Optimal and Non-optimal Language Types
14.1	Introduction	290
14.2	The Principle of Procedural Dependency	291
14.3	The Principle of Optimal Harmony	295
14.4	Optimal and non-optimal procedure types	298
15	An Explanatory Model of Comparative-type Choice
15.1	Introduction	304
15.2	The prediction of comparative-type occurrence	305
15.3	The prediction of language distributions	319
15.4	The prediction of double options	323
15.5	An evaluation of the new model	334
	Notes	336
	Appendix A: Alphabetical Listing of the Sample	347
	Appendix B: Genetic and Areal Stratification of the Sample	352
	Bibliography	356
	Index of Topics	367
	Index of Languages	371
