2.4.5. Lexical features 63
2.4.6. Multiply-dimensional architectures 66

2.5. Functionalism 72
2.5.1. Functionalism vs. formalism 72
2.5.2. Functionalist methodology 78

3. Configurations 80
3.1. Configurational languages 80

3.2. The left periphery 86
3.2.1. Cartography 87
3.2.2. An even finer structure of the left periphery 95

3.3. The importance of information structure 101
3.3.1. Distinguishing topicalization from left dislocation in English 107
3.3.2. Focus preposing and Yiddish movement in English 110
3.3.3. When the left-peripheral element does not have information-structural impact 112
3.3.4. Fronting non-topics 113
3.3.5. Focusing the subject: existentials 119
3.3.6. Clefts: syntactic mapping of information structure 121
3.3.7. Other strategies for marking subjects as non-topics 121
3.3.8. Left-peripheral prospects 123

3.4. Scrambling 124
3.4.1. Scrambling in Russian 125
3.4.1.1. Syntactic topic and focus features and Russian word order 130
3.4.2. Scrambling in Japanese 131
3.4.3. Dutch scrambling 136
3.4.4. Scrambling in Persian 145

3.5. Scandinavian object shift 147
3.6. Concluding remarks on word order 152

4. Information Structure Constraints 154
4.1. Identification 154
4.1.1. Argument identification, a constraint on topicalization 154
4.1.2. Identification of IS functions 159