

Table of Contents

Part I

1	Introduction	3
1.1	Critical Foundation and the Goals of the Analysis	4
1.2	Masculinity as a Subject of Criticism	8
1.3	The Outline of this Study	14
2	The Socio-Political Situation of British Men and their Media Representation	17
2.1	The Socio-Political Situation of British Men in the 1990s	17
2.2	The Media and their Representation of Masculinity	26
2.3	Intermediality	39
2.4	The Intermedial Constructs of Masculinity	41
3	Masculinity	45
3.1	Sex/Gender/Masculinity	45
3.1.1	Jacques Lacan and the Formation of the Self	46
3.1.2	Judith Butler and the Category of Performative Gender	50
3.1.3	Robert W. Connell and Hegemonic Masculinity	55
3.2	Masculinity and the Body	57
3.2.1	Gender as a Stylisation of the Body	58
3.2.2	Body-Reflexive Practices	60
3.2.3	The Subject	61
3.3	Conclusion	66
4	Media, Mediality, Intermediality	69
4.1	Medium and Mediality	71
4.2	Approaching the Media Matrix and Intermediality	77
4.3	The Boundary	87

Part II

1	Establishing Boundaries	91
1.1	Man vs. Woman: The Traditional Construct of Sexual Difference in Notting Hill	93
1.1.1	Dominance within the Narrative	95
1.1.2	The Spectacle of the Body	100
1.1.3	Specular Femininity	103
1.1.4	The Traditional Distinctiveness of Gender Representation	104
1.2	Male Identity as a Struggle against the Object: Kenneth Branagh's Frankenstein	105
1.2.1	Two Phases of Frankenstein's Development	107
1.2.2	The Creature as the Object	109
1.2.3	Frankenstein's Struggle for a (Homogenous) Identity	113
1.2.4	Frankenstein's Struggle for Sound Body Boundaries	116
1.2.5	The Inseparability of Frankenstein and the Creature: The Regulation of Masculinity	119
1.3	The Surface of the Body: Ron Mueck's Sculptures	120
1.3.1	The Phallic Body	122
1.3.2	The Impermeability of the Body	126
1.3.3	Copy without Origin: The Erasure of the Male Body	130
1.4	Conclusion	134
2	Erasing the Binaries: Establishing the In-Between	137
2.1	The Destabilising Function of Touch: DV8's Enter Achilles	140
2.1.1	The Male Dancer	142
2.1.2	Oppressive/Defensive Masculinity	145
2.1.3	Ambiguous Narrative and Gaze	148
2.1.4	Contact Improvisation and the Erasure of Boundaries	151
2.2	Parfait Mélange : The Representation of the Male Body in Peter Greenaway's The Pillow Book	154
2.2.1	Oppositions and the Space In-Between	155
2.2.2	The Intertwining of the Body and Text	159
2.2.3	The Inseparability of the Male and the Female	162
2.2.4	Mediatisation and the Body	164
2.3	The Ambiguous Union of the Self and the Other: Douglas Gordon's Monstrous Self	169

2.3.1	The Pluralist Background of Gordon's Art	170
2.3.2	Me/Monster	176
2.3.3	The Case of Borders and their Significance	181
2.4	Conclusion	183
3	Breaking up the Boundaries	187
3.1	The Fissures in Performative Identity: The Violent Distortion of the Male Body	188
3.1.1	Theatrical Subversion	188
3.1.2	Body without Organs: Against the Establishment of Identity	194
3.1.3	The Sensate Body and Non-Normative Identity	196
3.1.4	The Violation of Appearance; the Surfacing of Corporeality	199
3.1.5	Sensation	202
3.2	Marc Quinn and the Material Body	203
3.2.1	The Self	208
3.2.2	The Register of the Feeling Body	212
3.3	Mutilation	215
3.3.1	Mark Ravenhill and the Violent Space of Re-definition	216
3.3.1.1	Mediatished Presence	218
3.3.1.2	The Permeability of the Body	221
3.3.1.3	Self-Mutilation	223
3.3.2	Franko B and the Liminal Body	227
3.3.2.1	The Body as a Site of Exchange	228
3.4	Intersubjectivity	233
4	Conclusion	235
4.1	The Presentation and Theorisation of the Male Body	235
4.2	The Minority Gazes	236
4.3	The International Experience of Masculinity	240
	Selected Bibliography	243