Contents

List of figures, tables and snapshots xi

Introduction xv

1 Studying work and society 1
People, work and society 1
Thinking about work sociologically 4
Choices, constraints and opportunities in work and society 4
Work and the sociological imagination 7
Sociology, critique and democratic debate about work 9
Sociology and the emergence of industrial societies 10
The continuing challenge 12
Sociology and the informing of democratic choices about work 13
Sociology and the future of work 14
Researching and theorising work patterns and experiences 16
Sociology as science 16
Theory, work and society 17
A range of research methods 18
Methodological assumptions 20
Coping with the variety of orientation in the sociology of work and industry 24

2 The sociological analysis of work and industry 29
Six strands of thought in the sociology of work 29
The managerial-psychologistic strand 31
Scientific management 31
Psychological humanism 33
Discussion 36
The Durkheim-systems strand 37
Emile Durkheim 38
Human relations and the Hawthorne studies 40

Systems thinking in industrial sociology 44
Corporate cultures 45
Discussion 46
The interactionist strand 47
The Chicago school and symbolic interactionism 48
Organisations as negotiated orders 49
Ethnomethodology 50
Discussion 52
The Weber-interpretivist strand 53
Max Weber 53
Orientations to work 56
Institutional theories of organisation and the social construction of reality 57
Discussion 59
The Marxian strand 60
Marx and Engels 60
Marxian industrial sociology and labour process analysis 62
Discussion 64
The poststructuralist strand and postmodernism 66
Postmodernism 66
Poststructuralist labour process thinking, Foucault, discourse and human subjectivity 67
Discussion 69
Towards a language-sensitive but not language-centred sociology of work and organisation 70

3 Work, society and globalisation 74
The nature of modern societies 74
The emergence of industrial capitalism 77
From feudalism to capitalism 77
Protestantism and the spirit of capitalism 79
Social groups and the rise of industrialism 82
Industrialisation and the changing division of labour 84
Technology, science and social change 87
Industrial capitalism: change and transition 90
Post-industrialism and the information society 90
Post-Fordism 92
Flexible specialisation 94
Postmodernity 95
McDonaldisation and the blurring of the manufacturing–service distinction 96
Globalisation in perspective 99

4 Work organisations 107
The organisational principle of work structuring 107
The nature of work organisations 109
Official and unofficial aspects of organisations 112
Organisational structures and cultures 115
Official structure and culture: basic organisational design principles 119
Bureaucracy 120
Classical administrative principles 123
Taylorism and Fordism 123
The limits of bureaucracy and the paradox of consequences 125
The virtues of bureaucracy, virtual organisations and the fantasy of the post-bureaucratic organisation 128
Contingency and choice in the shaping of organisational structures and cultures 131
Micropolitics, careers and unofficial management practices 134
Vertical aspects of micropolitics 136
Horizontal aspects of micropolitics 139
Unofficial practices and bureaucratic dysfunctions 141
Ambiguity and decision processes 143

5 The changing organisation and control of work 147
Work restructuring and the logic of corporate management 147
The logic of corporate management 149
Choice and circumstance in the shaping of employment or 'human resourcing' practices 152
Labour processes and employment practice options 153
HRM and the choice between 'high commitment' and 'low commitment' human resourcing strategies 155
The pursuit of flexibility and direct and indirect managerial control options 159
The pursuit of flexibility and new work control practices 161
Teamworking and control 162
Lean production and process re-engineering 165
Change and continuity in HR strategies and work practices 167
Information and communication technologies (ICTs) and control 168
Culture management and worker subjectivity 172

6 Occupations, inequality and varieties of work 176
The occupational principle of work structuring 176
Occupational structure, class, status and inequality 180
Locating an occupation in the class structure 183
Ownership, control and the class location of managers 185
Status and the 'first line manager' 187

Status and dirty work 189
Labour market segmentation and non-standard employment 190
Part-time and temporary work 191
Home and teleworking 192
Work outside employment 194
Self-employment 194
Paid work in the informal economy 196
Domestic work 197
Voluntary work 200
Gender and inequality 201
Changing historical patterns 201
Contemporary patterns 202
Explaining patterns 207
Ethnicity and inequality 210
Occupational socialisation and recruitment 211
Occupational careers 214
Occupational identity, culture and ideology 215
Occupational communities 218
Professionalisation and occupational strategies 219

7 Work experiences, identities and meanings 226
Work, meaning and culture 226
Entering work 230
Choice and opportunity structures 230
Class, family and educational influences 232
Work and satisfaction 233
Technology, work experience and alienation 236
Work orientations: variations, dynamics and the negotiation of implicit contracts 239
Dynamic work orientations and changing worker priorities 241
Dynamic work orientations and the negotiation of implicit contracts 244
Patterns of work orientation and experience within the organisational hierarchy 247
Women's preferences, choices and work orientations 248
Identity, discourse and work experience 251
Identity, discourse and identity work 251
Portfolio and 'boundaryless' careers or 'one dead end job after another' 256
Managerial orientations and experiences 259
Anxiety, emotion and sexuality at work 261
Angst in the human condition generally and in managerial work specifically 261
The rise of the stress discourse 262
Emotions and feelings 262

Emotional labour, emotion management and aesthetic labour 264
Sexuality and the workplace 266
Work and non-working lives 268
Work, leisure and work–life balance 268
Unemployment 271

8 Conflict, resistance and misbehaviour in work 275
Conflict and cooperation at work 275
Analysing conflict at work 279
Frames of reference 279
Unitary thinking 279
Pluralist analyses 280
Radical perspectives 281
Contradictions and conflicts 282
Effort bargains, fragile implicit contracts and the inevitability of grievances 287
The mobilisation of interests 290
Coalitions and interests 290
Trade unions and collective bargaining 291
Changing patterns of employer–union relations 293
Shop stewards and workplace representation 296
Job control strategies and 'making out' 297
Adjustment, resistance and organisational mischief 299
Accommodation, subjectivity and values 301
Withdrawal, instrumentalism and the management of boredom 302
Humour at work 305
Bullying and sexual harassment 308
Cheating, fiddling and breaking things 309
Rule manipulation 312
Service work and defence of self 313

Concept guide and glossary 316
Bibliography 335
Author index 379
Subject index 386

Figures, tables and snapshots

Figures

1.1	Individuals make society and society makes individuals	6
2.1	The capitalist mode of production	61
4.1	Official and unofficial aspects of organisations in their societal context	116
4.2	Contingencies and managerial choices in shaping organisational structures and cultures	134
5.1	Choices and constraints in the shaping of organisational human resourcing practices	157
7.1	Factors influencing the individual's approach to work	231
7.2	Intrinsic and extrinsic work satisfactions: a continuum	235
7.3	Blauner's 'inverted U curve' relating alienation and technology	238
7.4	The individual's perceived implicit contract at the centre of their work orientation	244
7.5	Two ideal types of relationship between individual and employing organisation (seen as two ends of various continuums related to the hierarchical structure of organisation)	248
8.1	The implicit contract between employer and employee in its societal and economic context	290

Tables

1.1	Realist and interpretivist social science methodologies	22
1.2	How the six strands of thought to be considered in Chapter 2 bring different emphases to the six focal areas of the sociology of work and industry covered in Chapters 3 to 8	26
2.1	Six strands of thought in the sociology of work and industry	30
3.1	Tönnies' notion of a transition from community to association	78
5.1	Two ideal type human resourcing strategies	156
5.2	Direct and indirect approaches in the pursuit of managerial control	159
5.3	Direct and indirect work design principles	160
7.1	Human identity, self-identity, social-identities and identity work	252

Snapshots

1.1	Two people arriving at work: a simple case of thinking sociologically	5
1.2	The personal troubles of Mathieu and Valerie	8
1.3	Designing a study of call centres: making use of a variety of techniques	19
1.4	Three proposed studies of the relationship between people's age and experience of work	23
2.1	'The hierarchy of needs theory doesn't stack up, does it?'	35
2.2	Her mind turned to Suicide: social solidarity and anomie in two organisational departments	39
2.3	Of rate busters and sociology tutorials	42
2.4	Connecting sex work, in particular, to service work generally	50
2.5	Putting ethnomethodology and 'negotiated order' to work on a factory yard	51
2.6	John's changing orientation to work	57
2.7	Jean learns a sociological lesson – the hard way	65
2.8	The life of Janet: discourses as constraining and enabling	72
3.1	The Lunar Society of Birmingham	83
3.2	Violin-making in Poterton	86
3.3	'The computer won't let me do my job'	89
3.4	Max and Samantha debate globalisation	100
4.1	Herding cats at Barkermills?	111
4.2	Mutual influences of official and unofficial practices at Barkermills	115
4.3	Official and unofficial structures at Begley's Foods	117
4.4	Official and unofficial culture at Begley's Foods	117
4.5	Some cultural features of Begley's Foods	119
4.6	The rationalisation and bureaucratisation of the Merryton Echo	122
4.7	Melkins' own 'bureaucratic personality' and the broken cricket bat	127
4.8	Marketing at Melkins: a means to business success or an end in itself?	128
4.9	Hitting the targets and endangering Melkins' future	128
4.10	Contingencies, underwear and the fight for survival	135
4.11	The narrowing ladder in the Ministry of Technology	137
4.12	The very model of a modern moral manager	138
4.13	Indulging the team	142
4.14	The union committee decision bin	144
5.1	Keeping the Liffatec show on the road?	152
5.2	HR strategy-making at Liffatec	158
5.3	Two types of flexibility in a telecommunications company	160
5.4	Coal and organisational choice: a classic study	163
5.5	Upgrading work in the Viewfields call centre	171
6.1	'She does something in the council offices'	178
6.2	Henry's complaint	182

6.3	Tom remembers an old song	189
6.4	Home workers in our village	193
6.5	Self-employed people in our village	195
6.6	Domestic work in Christopher and Christine Fellows' home	200
6.7	Pamela volunteers	201
6.8	Bedtime stories	204
6.9	Gendered roles and the microwave oven	205
6.10	Women and men of the !Kung	208
6.11	The occupation of soldiering	216
6.12	Discursive ingenuity and the professional institute	224
7.1	Wei Lei reflects on 'working hard'	229
7.2	Three medical students talk about parental pressure	232
7.3	The meat worker and the stone mason compare their jobs	237
7.4	Four cases of change in work orientation	243
7.5	Mary's new job and new implicit contract	245
7.6	Clive goes for a 'win–win' in his supermarket store	247
7.7	Michael reflects on who he is	253
7.8	Humiliation and indignity at the bottom of the heap in the USA	258
7.9	Stress and hardship at the bottom of the heap in the UK	259
7.10	Kelly, Joan and the difficult customer	263
7.11	Emotion management in a special care baby unit	265
7.12	Caitlin's aesthetic and emotional labour	267
7.13	Heidi, Will and Evan and three relationships between work and leisure	269
8.1	Working for Asif	276
8.2	Thomas watches the control-commitment pendulum swing back and forth	287
8.3	Frank starts a fire	301
8.4	Scrimshaw scrimshanks	304
8.5	Humour among sex workers	306
8.6	Hawks, donkeys, wolves and vultures	311
8.7	Three types and levels of sabotage	311
8.8	Customer labelling in the fish and chip shop	314