

Contents

Preface . . . . .	vii
I. Hong Kong as a British Colony and a Chinese Community. . . . .	1
1. The Government of Hong Kong in the Early Years (1843-1913)	1
2. The Chinese Community in Hong Kong . . . . .	7
II. The Early Government Schools in Hong Kong. . . . .	15
1. Traditional Education in China and England: A Comparison . . .	15
2. Beginning of Government Intervention—Role of the Missionaries and the Chinese Village Schools . . . . .	22
III. Establishment of the Department of Government Schools. . . . .	33
1. Conditions Conducive to New Development . . . . .	33
2. Transition from Church Control to Government Intervention . .	37
IV. Emergence of the Grant Scheme: Establishment of the Dual System . . . . .	47
1. Unsatisfactory Progress in the Government Village Schools . . . .	47
2. Introduction of the Grant-In-Aid System . . . . .	54
V. Emergence of a New Policy—Shift to Emphasis on English Education . . . . .	65
1. Road to a New Policy. . . . .	65
2. British Policy in China and the Promotion of English Education in Hong Kong. . . . .	77
VI. Consolidation in Supervision of Schools: The 1913 Education Ordinance . . . . .	91
1. Consolidation in Administration. . . . .	91
2. Problems of Educational Control in England and China . . . . .	98
3. Development of Government Supervision over Private Schools —The 1913 Education Ordinance . . . . .	103
VII. Founding of the University of Hong Kong: Its Ideals and Goals . . .	117
1. Growing Demands for Higher Learning in China and England. . .	117
2. Founding of the University: Ideals and Goals . . . . .	124

VIII. Hong Kong-educated Chinese in the Modernization of China . . . . .	131
1. Contributions to the Late Ch'ing Reforms . . . . .	132
2. Role in the 1911 Revolution . . . . .	147
3. Prominent Careers in Early Republican China . . . . .	151
IX. Conclusion. . . . .	157
Appendix I. Trend of Population Growth in Hong Kong, 1841-1913 . . .	161
Appendix II. Location of the Early Government Village Schools, 1848-59 . . . . .	162
Appendix III. Comparative Statistics of Government and Grant Schools. . .	163
Appendix IV. Comparative Number of Students in the Central School and Other Government Schools . . . . .	165
Appendix V. Proportion of the Total Expenditure of the Colony Devoted to Education (1853-1913) . . . . .	167
Bibliography. . . . .	171
Index . . . . .	181
Plates (between page 46 and page 47)	