

Contents

Foreword	vii
Preface	ix
Chapter 1. Education, Identity, and Cheap French Fries	1
“‘They’ Are Not Like ‘Us’”	5
Hegemonic Cultures	14
Cultural Politics and Education	18
Chapter 2. The Politics of Official Knowledge: Does a National Curriculum Make Sense?	22
The Question of a National Curriculum	24
Between Neoconservatism and Neoliberalism	27
Curriculum, Testing, and a Common Culture	31
Who Benefits?	35
Rethinking Common Culture	38
Chapter 3. Becoming Right: Education and the Formation of Conservative Movements with Anita Oliver	42
Understanding Rightist Movements	42
“‘Accidental’” Formations	44
A World of Danger	46
State Formation and Bureaucratic Control	52
Professionals and Censors	55
The Construction of an Active Right	59
Identity Politics and the State	63
Does It Have to Be This Way?	65
Chapter 4. American Realities: Poverty, Economy, and Education with Christopher Zenk	68
Taking the Economy Seriously	69
American Realities	71
The Current Structuring of Paid Employment	78
The Future Economy	82
Experiencing Paid Work	86
Placing the Blame Where It Belongs	87

Chapter 5. Conclusion: Taking the Fun Out of Educational Reform	91
Misreading Connections	94
The Practical and the Critical	97
Being Honest with Ourselves	104
On Nonreformist Reforms	107
It Ain't All Local	109
Notes	119
Bibliography	137
Index	145
About the Authors	149