

TABLE OF CONTENTS

|                                                                                                                                       |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Preface .....                                                                                                                         | vii |
| Steven Gould Axelrod                                                                                                                  |     |
| Chapter One .....                                                                                                                     | 1   |
| Williams, Frost and the Magic of the Commonplace                                                                                      |     |
| Peter Halter                                                                                                                          |     |
| Chapter Two.....                                                                                                                      | 13  |
| “To make a figure heroic yet modern”: Uncovering the Playwrightin the Letters of William Carlos Williams to Edgar Irving Williams |     |
| A. J. Krivak                                                                                                                          |     |
| Chapter Three.....                                                                                                                    | 31  |
| Requiem for Leipzig: Williams, Zukofsky, and Poetic Realism                                                                           |     |
| Todd Carmody                                                                                                                          |     |
| Chapter Four .....                                                                                                                    | 45  |
| Poetics—Poems—Politics: The Politically Subversive Force in Williams’sPoems of the 1920s and 1930s                                |     |
| Christina Oltmann                                                                                                                     |     |
| Chapter Five.....                                                                                                                     | 63  |
| Evolutions and Improvisations: Method and Materialityin Kora in Hell                                                       |     |
| Eric White                                                                                                                            |     |
| Chapter Six.....                                                                                                                      | 80  |
| “The eternal bride and / father—quid pro quo”: Williams,Marcia Nardi and Paterson                                          |     |
| Erin E. Templeton                                                                                                                     |     |
| Chapter Seven .....                                                                                                                   | 101 |
| “We are all dealers in used furniture”: Marriage in Robert Lowell’sPoetry and the Counseling of Williams                          |     |
| Grzegorz Kosci                                                                                                                        |     |

|                                                                                                                                          |     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Chapter Eight .....                                                                                                                      | 116 |
| Jackson Pollock's "Blobs of Paint" in the Poetry of Williamsand Frank O'HaraPaul Cappucci                                        |     |
| Chapter Nine .....                                                                                                                       | 134 |
| "push . . . / thing . . . / other . . . / . . . work": Robert Creeley,Williams and the Poem as a Machine Made of WordsNick Selby |     |
| Chapter Ten .....                                                                                                                        | 153 |
| Creeley and Williams: Measuring Williams's Selected EssaysChristopher MacGowan                                                |     |
| Chapter Eleven .....                                                                                                                     | 164 |
| Williams without Words: A Dialogue with Michael PalmerDavid Arnold                                                                   |     |
| Chapter Twelve .....                                                                                                                     | 181 |
| "Close to Williams' house": Williams to Armantrout via NiedeckerRobert Stanton                                                       |     |
| Contributors .....                                                                                                                       | 199 |