

Contents

Preface

Part I:	A new approach to the study of language learning . . . . .	1
	1. Naturalistic L2 acquisition: issues, goals and perspectives . . .	3
	2. Focus on the student: foreign language teaching from the learner's point of view . . . . .	23
Part II:	Language learning and cognition . . . . .	31
	3. Four early stages in the development of L1 negation . . . . .	32
	4. Some stages in the acquisition of questions by monolingual children . . . . .	47
	5. Grammatical intonation in child language . . . . .	94
Part III:	The nature of language development . . . . .	109
	6. Developmental sequence: an alternative approach to morpheme order . . . . .	111
	7. On the usefulness of experimental elicitation techniques for investigations on naturalistic L2 acquisition . . . . .	120
Part IV:	Interlanguage strategies . . . . .	131
	8. Operating principles and „universals” in L1, L2 and FLT . . .	133
	★ 9. On the systematicity of L1 transfer in L2 acquisition . . . . .	144
	10. The beginnings of non-schoolroom L2 phonological acquisition . . . . .	150
Part V:	Universals . . . . .	167
	★ 11. Language acquisition, pidgins and language typology . . . . .	169
	12. Phonology in L2 acquisition . . . . .	175
Part VI:	Towards an integrated theory of language acquisition . . . . .	189
	13. An integrated view of language learning . . . . .	190
	★ 14. Contrastive analysis and language learning . . . . .	202
	Concluding Remarks . . . . .	213
	Bibliography . . . . .	215